Firemen check rubble left by Ireland's latest bomb blast

Peace Rejection Rumor Deepens Ulster Crisis

Times News Services

LONDON — Northern Ireland Premier Brian Faulkner flew back to London today for further crisis talks with Prime Minister Edward Heath. Reports circulated in Belfast that Northern Ireland had rejected Heath's peace plan aimed at ending violence in Ulster.

And in Carrickfergus, Northern Ireland, a huge terrorist bomb blast injured 12 persons after a false tip forced police to evacuate the wrong area of the market town.

The explosion — caused by up to 200 pounds of gelignite in a parked car — shattered buildings in North Street after police were told the bomb was in West Street.

Security forces said it was "deliberate misinformation" on the same pattern as Belfast's Donegall Streeet blast earlier this week in which six persons were killed and 150 were injured.

The casualties in Carrickfergus — none was seriously hurt — included three policemen.

In the House of Commons in London, Gerard Fitt, Northern Ireland Republican MP, reported the rumors that Heath's peace plan had been rejected and said if this were true there could be "communal violence and disturbances" in Ulster this weekend.

Heath and Faulkner met for nearly 10 hours Wednesday to discuss the plan, believed to offer more civil rights to the minority Roman Catholics; then each held urgent meetings with their cabinets in London and Belfast.

After the Belfast meeting the cabinet issued a statement saying it was united behind Faulkner but without saying whether it was for or against the peace proposals. Rejection of the peace package could lead to Britain's seizing control of the Ulster government.

Heath received a telephone call from Faulkner and then called in his top ministers, including Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home who had cut short an official visit to Israel to help out with the crisis.

London's silence and the Belfast statement about cabinet unity were interpreted by politicians here as an indication the two governments are deeply at loggerheads about concessions the British want Faulkner to make to the RCs.

The two prime ministers conferred by telephone after their respective cabinet meetings. Political sources said Britain was holding over Faulkner's head the threat of suspension of the province's local government and imposition of direct rule from London if the British proposals are rejected.

Women in Belfast's Protestant Sandy Row district took steps today to thwart the booby-trapping of vehicles. They threw up barricades of furniture and garbage to prevent cars from parking. Two bombs have exploded in parked cars in the district in the past two weeks.

"If anyone leaves his car in Sandy Row he'll find it wrecked when he comes back," Mrs. Patricia Neil said. "They can jail us if they like, but we're going to protect our homes."

Embattled Principal Supported

Special to the Times

CAMPBELL RIVER — A campaign to support embattled high school principal John Young got a boost Wednesday night when a public meeting gave him an overwhelming vote of confidence.

There were about six dissenters when chairman Jack Torrance called for a confidence vote and 650 persons including about 450 adults shouted their approval.

The meeting, organized by staff at Campbell River Senior Secondary, was the latest development in the renewed crisis at the school sparked by a school board decision Tuesday to ask Young for his resignation.

School district secretary-treasurer Phil Sampson delivered the request to Young's office Wednesday and left several minutes later with an official written reply from the principal saying he didn't have "the slightest intention of resigning."

Young had the floor for most of the orderly two-hour meeting at Campbell River community hall, fielding questions from the audience and answering charges levelled against him Tuesday by school trustee Ray Sharpe.

Sharpe had charged that Young refused to supply district superintendent Bill Ramsay and the school board with requested information, including exact attendance figures.

"I state here publicly," Young said, "that the allegation is categorically untrue, absolutely untrue. We have never denied information.

"What I have done is resist very, very strongly the harassment of Mr. Ramsay's demands for information which has nearly paralyzed my work and has prevented me from doing my real job as principal of that school," he said.

"I've been principal for 15 years (seven years here) and never in my life have I been harassed like this for information."

Socred Marshall Bolts to Tories

By PETER McNELLY
Times Staff

Don Marshall of South Peace River resigned from the Social Credit government Wednesday to join the Progressive Conservatives, protesting government inaction on the problems of agriculture and small businesses.

Marshall became the third person to quit Social Credit since it came to power in 1952. He joins Scott Wallace (PC—Oak Bay) as a Tory, giving that party two seats without having won either in an election.

MARSHALL

Wallace Quit Last Summer

Wallace quit the Socreds Aug. 18, 1971 and joined the PCs early this year. When the house resumed sitting in the evening, Marshall rose in his place and said:

"I beg leave of this house to make a statement of public interest. I want to formally announce tonight my resignation from the Social Credit Party and to advise henceforth that I will be sitting in this house as a member of the Progressive Conservative party."

He said he did not want to "disparage" the government, but it had become obvious that its policies were not helping agriculture and small businesses.

"Because of these reasons and many others, I do now leave the house," Marshall said, then walked out of the chamber.

All opposition MLAs pounded their deks in approval, but so did Socreds Agnes Kripps (Vancouver South) and Dudley Little (Skeena).

Bennett later refused comment, but he said he was unaware that Marshall was going to quit the government.

Marshall was first elected in 1969, taking 70 per cent of the vote in his riding. His defection marks the first time the Socreds will not hold a seat in the Peace River since they took power in 1952.

Marshall's formal resignation came just after 8 p.m., but he first announced it outside the house after the legislature rose for dinner at 6 p.m.

He told reporters he made up his mind about 4 p.m. He said he had first been approached by B.C. Tory leader Derril Warren three weeks ago.

Marshall described Warren as a protege of Alberta Conservative Premier Peter Lougheed. He said he became impressed with Lougheed last year while campaigning in Alberta for the Socreds and admires his farm policies.

Marshall, 39, said the Tory sweep in Alberta was a healthy change which brought many young people to government. He said he was first asked to join B.C.'s Tories by Warren's predecessor John de Wolf but was not enthusiastic

Marshall 'Made No Deals'

Don Marshall made no deals with the provincial Tories when he decided to quit the Social Credit Party, B.C. Progressive Conservative Party leader Derril Warren said Wednesday.

Warren told a press conference he made no promises to the MLA from South Peace River during their discussions over the last month.

The Tory leader had just flown to Victoria to greet his new party member after hearing of his resignation on the 6 p.m. news in Vancouver.

"He's got serious problems in his area," Warren said, "serious agricultural problems and serious industrial problems. He has tried very hard to get the government to recognize the problems and do something about them and the government has failed to do so."

DELIGHTED

Oak Bay MLA Scott Wallace, who quit the Socreds last August and later joined the Tories, said he was delighted with Marshall's defection.

The two men are close friends.

"He's an independent thinker and he has guts," Wallace said.

Warren said Marshall's res-

Blizzard Kills Quebec Strike

Times News Services

QUEBEC — A state of emergency has been declared in the wake of a blizzard as Quebec City police called in snowmobiles to rescue persons stranded in automobiles overnight.

The storm, which raged across most of the east and central parts of the province, dumping a foot and a half of snow, freezing rain and ice pellets, also forced postponement of a planned 24-hour strike by 210,000 provincial government employees.

Quebec Mayor Gilles Lamontagne called for calm in a radio address. Many people were without electricity or stranded in townhtown hotels and office buildings.

POLES TOPPLE

Winds of up to 46 miles an hour toppled hundreds of utility poles throughout the area north of Montreal from Hull to the Gaspe.

Marcel Pepin, president of the Confederation of National Trade Unions, announced the postponement of the strike at a news conference. No new date was set.

He said the combination of the planned strike and the crippling blizzard could endanger the public.

The strike had been planned by a common front of three labor groups — the CNTU, the Quebec Federation of Labor and the Quebec Teachers Corp.

Until the announcement, various preparations had been under way to maintain minimal services when the strike started.

TRANSPORT HALTED

The blizzard paralysed transportation in Quebec City, and schools, commercial establishments and all non-essential government offices remained closed today. The two bridges leading to the city across the St. Lawrence River are closed.

Feb. Price Rise Record in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The biggest jump in grocery prices in 14 years last month led to the sharpest rise in over-all United States living costs since before President Nixon imposed economic controls Aug. 15, the government reported today.

The consumer price index, measuring typical family living costs, rose five-tenths of one per cent in February, largest increase in nine months, the labor department's bureau of labor statistics said.

Grocery prices, which include a number of items that are not subject to federal price controls, soared 1.9 per cent for the greatest one-month increase since March, 1958.

The report followed the resignation of three AFL-CIO members of Nixon's pay board, who charged the government was rigidly holding down wages while letting prices climb. (See Page 15.)

The bureau also reported that average weekly earnings of some 45 million workers rose 35 cents a week to $130.27, but that purchasing power declined 24 cents because of the rise in consumer prices.

The February increase pushed the price index to 123.8 per cent of its 1967 average. This means it cost $12.38 last month for every $10 worth of typical family purchases five years ago.

The February increase was the greatest since a six-tenths of one per cent rise last June, two months before Nixon imposed a 90-day wage-price freeze which was then followed by Phase Two controls.

Ottawa Tied to Methadone

By JEFF CARRUTHERS
Special to the Times

OTTAWA — The government will not experiment with giving heroin to heroin addicts legally, as is happening in Britain and as was recently suggested to the LeDain commission.

Health Minister John Munro said outside the Commons Wednesday that he did not think the experiment with heroin should be tried.

One reason, he explained, is that the suggestion was "carefully hedged" in the drug treatment report published in January by the LeDain Commission on Drug Abuse.

Instead, health experts have decided to place emphasis in heroin treatment on controlled methadone therapy. Methadone is a substitute for heroin and while it is addictive, it does not produce as much of a "high" as heroin for the addict.

"We want to give our new methadone treatment policy a good trial and see what it does," Munro explained. Restrictions on methadone use were announced in February and go into effect June 1.

The minister said he would make an official statement on the heroin experiment question in "about two weeks."

In the Commons Wednesday, he told Frank Howard (NDP — Skeena) that he hoped, "to clean up" aspects of the LeDain commission's treatment report that he had not dealt with as yet with a statement to the house shortly.

The LeDain commission suggested in its drug treatment report, very cautiously, that heroin should be made available to some physicians for treating special cases of heroin addiction on an experimental basis, partially in the hopes of luring addicts to methadone treatment.

EASTER BLEEDING SYNDROME is the explanation given by doctors for the mysterious bleeding in the hands, feet and side of Clorette Robinson, 10, of Oakland, Calif. The bleeding has been going on for a week but there are no wounds. Medical authorities believe it is caused by auto-suggestion or other emotional conditions with the girl associating herself with the crucifixion of Jesus Christ on Good Friday.

Teamsters Allege Racial, Religious Discrimination

The Teamsters Union said this morning it is filing complaints under the Human Rights Act against Standard Furniture and a newly-formed company which will run the warehouse in Esquimalt.

Don Dent, business agent for Local 31 of the Teamsters Union, said the complaints involve racial and religious discrimination. They will be laid before the Human Rights Commission.

Dent said employment application forms used by Standard Furniture ask prospective employees what clubs, societies and church "now or formerly" the person is affiliated with. Also sought is birthplace and citizenship.

He said the new company, Service Management Co. Ltd., asks the same questions except the church affiliation is "stroked out."

"The complaints will be against both companies," he said.

Dent also said the new company asks "known by whom at Standard Furniture Company staff."

Tom Denny, one of the owners of Standard Furniture, could not be reached at noon for comment.

Earlier, Dent said a corporate re-arrangement involving Standard Furniture's warehouse "is an attempt to circumvent the union."

He said 18 employees received termination letters Wednesday but that 16 of them have been re-hired by the new company. The union would seek to vary its certification as bargaining agent to the new firm.

Denny said earlier a group of "long service employees at the Standard Furniture stock depot in Esquimalt have formed a company and offered to contract for the operation."

The union and Standard Furniture have been in negotiations for a labor agreement in recent weeks. The union has been certified as bargaining agent since 1966 but no contract has been signed.

Denny said the new company, which will operate from the warehouse which will remain in Standard Furniture ownership, will re-hire the employees it wants to. "It is not up to me," he said.

He added that the move was "quite legal" and said he wanted to "give credit to the initiative of the employees" who who are going into business for themselves and contracting to do work for Standard Furniture.

Dent said he understood three employees were directors of the new company.

All Calm Following Que. Clash

SEPT-ILES, Que. (CP) — Workers wearing hard hats and watched by riot-equipped police returned to their jobs at a construction site here today following a clash Wednesday with a rival union which left nine persons injured and an estimated $65,000 damage.

A spokesman for Canadian Bechtel Ltd., major contractor at the Iron Ore Co. of Canada Ltd. plant site, said he expected to work as usual.

All cars approaching the site were stopped and searched at a roadblock. Police reported confiscating about a dozen axe and sledge-hammer handles.

One worker who identified himself as a member of the Quebec Federation of Labor said he doubted the rival Confederation of National Trade Unions would try to close down the site—an action which he said sparked the violent clash Wednesday.

Buttle Oil Spill Checked

CAMPBELL RIVER (CP) — An inspector of the Upper Island Health unit is taking water samples from Buttle Lake to check the extent of oil pollution, following a 6,700-gallon spill by Western Mines Ltd.

The diesel oil escaped from storage tanks at the Company's Myra Creek operations into a creek that runs into Buttle Lake, one of several which feed Campbell River's water supply.

Health inspector Stephen Chamut said Wednesday he doubts the oil would significantly affect the water supply even if it did reach Buttle Lake. He said the water system intake valves are well below the surface of the water, and are located 60 miles from the point where Myra Creek empties into the lake.

RUPERT TO HANDLE MORE EXPORT WHEAT

OTTAWA (CP) — Grain shipment facilities will be built at Prince Rupert, and a larger proportion of wheat en route to Russia, China and Pacific countries will be moved through the northern port, Transport Minister Don Jamieson told the Commons today.

Jamieson said Prince Rupert is becoming the 10th National Harbors Board port and the board will "invite proposals" leading to the establishment of a modern grain transshipment facility there.

ignation raises the major issue of the "lack of activity of a government that has been in power for a long time."

He said Marshall brings a necessary rural quality to the revived Tories, who have an urban seat under Wallace. Warren praised Marshall's combination of agricultural and industrial experience.

Warren said he has asked other Socreds whether they would like to join the Tories but he didn't want to embarrass "either him or her" by naming names.

Reaction to his appeals has been favorable, Warren said.

UNREST

"There is an unrest within the party and his resignation is a sign of what is happening to Social Credit."

Warren said Marshall thought a long time before making his decisions, which he said was a "happy coincidence" on the eve of the Tory convention Friday and Saturday in Vancouver.

Nominating conventions for the party begin April 4 throughout the province, Warren said, and 23 persons are ready to run and 13 more are considering.

Earlier in Vancouver, Warren said he will announce Saturday where he intends to run.

He said that he will seek nomination in a lower mainland riding, but he is saving disclosure of which riding for his keynote speech Saturday night to the party's annual meeting.

Warren's home is in West Vancouver-Howe sound riding, but he said he will not run there.

Opposition Leader Dave Barrett wouldn't comment on what Marshall's move meant politically to the NDP in northern B.C.

He said the former Socred never approached the NDP "and we never approached him."

"It's a matter of conscience and that's the way it is," Barrett said.

As chairman of the legislature's agriculture committee, Barrett said, Marshall "really learned the frustrations of trying to work with Premier Bennett."

NO COMMENT

Bennett brushed past reporters on his way into the legislature moments before Marshall made his formal announcement. He had heard about the defection during a news program between the afternoon and evening sittings.

"I have no statement. I had no inkling at all," Bennett said, rushing into the house.

Liberal Leader Pat McGeer said he wasn't surprised. He said he expected Marshall to join the Tories because the Peace River district is so linked to the influence of Alberta.

"This won't be the last of the Social Crediters to leave the ship early," McGeer predicted. "It helps to indicate that the Social Credit government is far past its peak and is nearing the end of its days."

Don Marshall's political neighbor in the Peace River, Socred Dean Smith, said today his friend "cut his own throat" Wednesday when he crossed the floor to join the Progressive Conservative Party.

"I say Don Marshall cut his own throat and the voters of the South Peace will have an opportunity to repudiate his decision in the next provincial election. In the meantime, the Peace River Country is still represented by Social Credit member on the government team and I am available to anyone from the South Peace who wished to contact me on any matter," Smith said.

about de Wolf's leadership abilities.

He said he hoped to be able to meet Bennett in a few days and discuss more deeply his reasons for leaving Social Credit. Bennett said he would make no effort to meet Marshall and ask him to change his mind.

"I certainly in no way am condemning the premier," Marshall said.

But he added he agrees with Scott Wallace (PC—Oak Bay) who left the government last August that a backbencher plays no meaningful role under Bennett.

Marshall is chairman of the legislature's agriculture committee. He said most of the discussions in the committee this year are repetitions of those from last session.

"It's an exercise in frustration, an excuse to keep the opposition busy and tired."

The new Tory said in February during the budget debate that farming problems in his riding today are worse than they were during the depression.

At the time, he noted that Lougheed's government had created a special $50 million program for agricultural aid to Alberta farmers but Bennett was only spending $200,000 to advertise B.C. farm products.

Marshall called for provincial loan money to help farmers get into the processing business and give them greater access to international markets.

Marshall also has asked for incentives for business development. He said it depressed him when Industrial Development Minister Waldo Skillings "turned his back" when faced with these suggestions earlier in the session.

Marshall's wife Shirley had joined him in the corridor during his press conference at 6 p.m. When he finished the interview, she smiled and kissed him lightly on the cheek.

Marshall said he had been under great strain in the last few weeks trying to decide whether to leave the government.

He said he hadn't discussed his resignation with other Socreds and wouldn't care to guess whether any others might want to follow him. He said he will run for re-election in the South Peace constituency.

Marshall said he has the support of Larry Lewin, president of the Social Credit constituency in his riding.

Marshall is the only farmer in the house. He is a past president of the South Peace Farmers Union. He was educated in Edmonton and worked for several gas companies, including Minneapolis-Honeywell Control Co. and Inland Natural Gas.

B.C.'s best known party switcher is, of course, Bennett, who quit the coalition government in 1951 to sit as an independent.

. . . YOUNG

Young said today that Ramsay is a conservative-minded, old-fashioned type of educator who doesn't understand the needs of modern education.

"He believes that students should shape up or ship out . . . he doesn't seem to understand that schools are in the business of trying to develop human potential.'"

Young added that Ramsay attaches importance to "so-called standards of performance, examination results and all those ideas which are becoming increasingly discredited by those who think seriously about the aims and purposes of modern education."

CONSERVATIVE

The principal said he categorically rejected such philosophies, which permeated the whole B.C. educational system.

Although Ramsay and the entire seven-member school board were invited to the public meeting, only trustee Mike Henderson and Janet Evans showed up. Both are Young supporters.

"To the best of my knowledge they were all invited," Henderson said. "I am a little disappointed they didn't show up. I would have hoped they all could have been here and then we could have possibly explained the board's position more fully."

Young said after the meeting he was happy with the response he received.

"I think it's an indication that the parents of this community generally support the policies of the school, and that the school board's views in this matter are not in harmony with those of the public."

Young said he had further talks with B.C. Teachers Federation officials Wednesday confirming that federation lawyers today will be studying Sharpe's statements against him for possible libel.

He said federation general secretary Charles Ovens assured him of full BCTF backing if the school board moves for dismissal.

PIMEN

Russian Church Rapped

MOSCOW (UPI) — Author Alexander Solzhenitsyn, often the critic of atheist Soviet authority, has turned his anger against the Russian Orthodox Church for not preventing the decline of Christianity.

In a Lenten letter made public Wednesday, the Nobel Prize winning author castigated Orthodox Patriarch Pimen for remaining silent in the face of "planned destruction of the spirit and body of the church under the leadership of atheists."

Pimen is the spiritual leader of Russia's approximately 20 to 30 million faithful. Solzhenitsyn, who was expelled from the Soviet Writer's Union and attacked in the press for his novels on Stalinist repression, is an avowed Orthodox believer.

He said the atmosphere of Soviet life prevented children from acquiring the habit of church-going "and you, the church hierarchy, have reconciled yourselves to this and you facilitate it, finding therein a convincing sign of freedom of conscience — in the fact that we are forced to hand over our children defenceless, not into neutral hands but into the control of atheist propaganda of the most primitive and dishonest kind."

He referred to the Soviet law which guarantees freedom of worship while giving the state the right to propagandize for atheism. But it forbids on pain of imprisonment the religious instruction of anyone under 18.

"We are losing the last little marks and signs of a Christian people, and should not this be the main concern of the Russian Patriarch?"

Regional Directors Study Budget Cuts, Chief's Pay

Capital Regional District board directors completed their review of the 1972 budget Wednesday with a closed-door discussion of salaries paid to non-union senior staff.

Budget trimming in two sessions cut $58,594 from the 1972 proposed budget of $1.86 million, which compares with the 1971 budget of $1.4 million and the 1971 estimated actual expenditure of $1.7 million.

Major increases in spending this year involve the sewerage program and the Juan de Fuca Arena in Colwood.

All staff members, including executive director Dennis Young, were excluded from the closed-door salary discussion.

Today, board chairman Hugh Curtis said there was "really no conclusion" to the discussion.

"It was a brief review of salaries paid to senior staff. It was conducted without benefit of any staff. It was just an informal discussion among directors," he said.

Directors have agreed that there will be no raises for the non-union staff until the board has had discussions and made a decision.

An earlier recommendation of the board's executive committee was that non-union staff receive a 1972 raise of 7.5 per cent, retroactive to Jan. 1, which is the same percentage increase negotiated for union members.

During Wednesday's budget meeting, the planning department gained approval to hire an assistant planner and a clerk-typist.

Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen said the region needs more planning, but he urged "more discipline" in planning objectives. He also questioned two draftsmen getting $1,000 a month — "that's a lot of money in the outside world."

Planning director Tony Roberts said the two draftsmen are employed in other work as well, including minor research, counter inquiries, subdivision plans and preparation of an exhibit for the Jaycee Fair.

Outer Gulf Islands director Jim Campbell said the objectives for the planning department "need to be set by the board."

Sooke director Howard Elder said "we need planning, but the price of it is just fantastic. We have to simplify the rezoning process."

Victoria director Tom Christie asked what the inner municipalities are getting in the $174,000 planning budget. It seemed to him the municipalities were paying without getting benefit.

Curtis said there is an element of subsidization. "I don't complain. Your point is valid. But if there is good solid regional planning then it's going to benefit the individual parts," he said.

Pollen said to be "niggardly in planning would be suicidal. We should give them the people to work with."

Building Unionists Huddle

Leaders of building trade unions in British Columbia were huddled in a meeting today as the deadline approached for an answer to proposals by Labor Minister James Chabot.

Officials of the B.C. and Yukon Building and Construction Trades Council were meeting this morning. In the afternoon, they were to meet leaders of unions affiliated with the council.

Friday, the B.C. Federation of Labor is holding a special one-day meeting of its affiliated unions to discuss the implications of Bill 88 and decide a course of action.

Chabot said Tuesday he is prepared to let Bill 88 — which would have the effect of making unlawful any agreement which restricts doing business with third parties — die on the order paper — if the building trades council agrees with his proposals by noon Friday.

Chabot wants the council to allow access to construction sites by unions outside the council and other clauses in contracts to mean any union rather than a building trade union.

Late Wednesday, the council asked for an extension of the deadline because it does not have authority to change union agreements without a membership decision.

Chabot refused to change the deadline but said if his proposals are rejected, he will move to have Bill 88 accompanied by a proclamation, so it would come into effect when the cabinet decides and not when the bill receives royal assent.

Almost all construction industry labor agreements expire at the end of this month, and within those agreements are clauses which will be affected by Bill 88. Negotiations were proceeding this morning between Construction Labor Relations Association, bargaining agent for contractors, and plumbers Local 170 and heat-frost insulators.

Nicholson 'Knights' Pollen

Mayor Peter Pollen was recently knighted Lord Mayor of the Loyal Order of Victoria Enthusiasts — LOVE for short — for Victoria Days to be held May 22 to 27.

The order was bestowed on Pollen by Lieutenant-Governor John Nicholson at the Union Club.

He also knighted Helen Beirnes, bread dame, and Jack McKernan, festival chairman, as black knight.

Titles of dame and knight were also bestowed on Josepha Herfst, William Watts, Bert Binny, Richard Talbot, Frederick Usher, Reginald Elliot, Derek Demny, Stanley Sierpina, Bill Rippon, Frederick Bradford, Walter Donald, Alan Houghton, Kirk Davis, Don Nixon, Lofty Coning, Same Lane and Bill Patterson.

A Victoria Days flag was also unveiled at the meeting. It's white with a black Ascot hat superimposed on a red heart.

Victoria Days will be similar to last year's festival, officials said.

Germany Jails Its Polluters

The culprits are not warned or fined but sent to jail, says Dr. Josef Neuberger, minister of justice of the state of North Rhine Westphalia.

Neuberger, who gave a lecture Wednesday to the law faculty at the University of British Columbia on German legislation and pollution, and later called on Lieutenant-Governor John Nicholson, said five years ago a polluting plant might have been fined a nominal sum.

But under recent legislation those responsible go to jail for at least six months.

"Fines didn't work so we had to impose punishments which would show the industrialists we were serious. The punishment had to be greater than the profit gained by polluting and then merely paying a fine."

LONG WAIT LIST FOR GORGE BEDS

There are enough patients awaiting admission to Gorge Road rehabilitation hospital to fill it again, the annual meeting was told Wednesday night.

The hospital society's president, Mrs. Irene Warren, said the hospital intends seeking a share of funds from the next regional hospital referendum so it can build badly-needed rehabilitation facilities.

There are 102 people waiting admission to the 99-bed hospital, the only rehabilitation hospital in Greater Victoria.

Many of them need special treatment to recover from such things as car accidents or strokes, she said. Some have to remain in acute-care hospitals where keeping them costs about $60 a day.

There is an immediate need for 50 more beds for rehabilitating patients, said Dr. C. Y. Brown, chairman of the hospital's medical advisory committee.

No Inquest For Logger

Coroner Eugene Murphy said today no formal inquest is likely in the death Tuesday of veteran Sooke logger Peter Fulton Hill, 62, of Sooke Road.

Hill was watching another man working on a nearby tree snag when a dead tree fell on him. The accident occurred at a Tripp Creek Logging Co. operation 25 miles northwest of Sooke.

Murphy said an informal inquiry had turned up no indication of negligence or other involvement by workmen at the scene.

Hill had more than a quarter-century of service with the logging firm.

Bigger—But Much Shakier

A danger peculiar to the twentieth century and its technological successes is now presenting an increasing threat to the form of society which we have evolved. It consists in the great vulnerability of systems which depend for their operation on the proper functioning of many integrated elements. When even a minor link in the chain ceases to perform, the whole complicated structure may become immobilized. With the increasing complexity and interdependence of many parts of our modern industrial and social machinery, the vulnerability of society as a whole could reach a critical point.

A relatively small break-down in part of one of the electrical grids which cover this continent may plunge a whole section of the country into darkness and immobility. A tiny error in a computer program may result in the failure of a multi-million-dollar rocket flight. A wage dispute in a key operation — say dock work — can pyramid a work stoppage to the point where it may paralyse many activities across the whole country. The more complex the system, the greater its vulnerability.

In engineering, the vulnerability of a mechanical system to malfunction in one of its components may be met in part by providing alternative circuits or processes. American space flights, for instance, are given insurance by providing alternatives for equipment which may prove faulty. But there are limits of cost and feasibility to this principle being applied to all situations.

One solution to what could become an unmanageable problem of modern technique is suggested by the New York Times: "What is needed is a new skepticism toward complex systems; and a new appreciation of the small and the simple. Bigger and more complicated does not necessarily mean better . . ."

That is a remedy not likely to be accepted — at least until the world has travelled a long way into further trouble. It implies a rejection of all the gadgetry on which modern life increasingly depends — the computer-robot era into which we are rushing. It may not be until a computer-robot gives man such advice that he will take it. Although perhaps only a faulty robot would come up with the suggestion.

Is It Twilight for the Dayliner?

It has been no secret in recent years that the CPR would like to abandon its passenger service on the E and N. It was for this attitude some time ago that the Board of Transport Commissioners investigating the railway company's plea, upbraided the operators, charging them with providing substandard service and with a lack of regard for passengers.

Now, as interested up-Island bodies see it, the company is once more attempting to phase out the service, raising fares and drastically reducing the number of stations on the run from Victoria to Courtenay.

The tocsin is sounding again up and down the Island in meetings of chambers of commerce and municipal organizations. Before any further alleged phasing-out takes place, the Transport Board should again examine the condition of the line, the company's obligations and what it has done, or left undone, to meet the standards of performance suggested at the last hearing.

Strange Bedfellows

An article in the Christian Science Monitor sees an emerging policy on China's offshore island of Taiwan: sharing by the Taiwanese government of intelligence information on mainland China with the Soviet Union is cited as one instance. The possible successor of Chiang Kai-shek, Chiang Ching-kuo, was educated in Moscow and became an admirer of Soviet Communism — these ties may influence his policies one day.

Taiwanese policies could fit in well with Moscow's seeming attempt to contain China by maintaining a clientele around China's periphery. It shows once again that interests rather than friendships continue to be at the bottom of the international system.

No matter how illogical or even incredible, Taipei's policies may begin to veer toward Moscow in the wake of the declining U.S. presence and Mr. Nixon's recent trip to China.

'Amo, Amas . . .'

Who needs Latin, asks the secondary school student in this scientific age. And from the classical scholar comes the reply that probably many more people than is commonly believed could benefit from its study. This appears to be the hope in Britain where the modern era has inadequately interred the so-called "dead language". At least the swing of the educational pendulum is encouraging a revival of the tongue used by the Romans as the world, dissatisfied with a life of materialism alone, turns to a search for a broader culture.

Latin is not necessarily now the language of the scholar, as it once was. Yet much of English literature is rooted in a knowledge of the classics. Today an understanding of the Mediterranean world grows increasingly important. The myths, fables, history and philosophies stemming from ancient Greece and Rome acquire renewed pertinence as man studies man.

The methods of instruction will have to change from the rote of an earlier time. But classical educators are prepared for that challenge. In Britain they have drafted new approaches to the subject and hope to give it revived popularity among students in the 11-to-13-year bracket.

Perhaps a new generation of students can, like their grandparents, find a new interest in "Amo, Amas", and through Latin win a better understanding of another almost-dead subject — English grammar.

LETTERS FROM OUR READERS

On the Contrary

May I comment on the newspaper headline which appeared on Page 21 of the Victoria Times of Thursday, March 16: "CURTIS HIT BY POLLEN ON COSTS."

It would be appropriate to make the observation that this is one of those headlines which tend to dramatize a situation where in fact very little drama existed.

It has been suggested that one of the more interesting exercises in certain radio and newspaper circles in Greater Victoria at the monent is to determine when Mayor Pollen and I may have a serious disagreement and it may be that your headline writer was a little overeager in anticipating this particular circumstance. I can assure him and your readers that the event has not yet occurred and there is no indication that it is about to happen. Quite the contrary, as Mayor Pollen and I find ourselves in close agreement on many fundamental issues.

Your account of the Capital Regional District Board's first review of its 1972 budget would have been more accurate if it had at least pointed out that in the course of over three hours of discussion (approximately half of which were conducted after the Victoria Times reporter departed), Mayor Pollen and I entered into this one exchange of what could be termed a difference of opinion. — Hugh A. Curtis, Mayor.

School Boards

Although municipal elections are several months away, it is not too early to give some consideration to the courses of study in our elementary and secondary schools.

At the present time, the curriculum for these schools is determined largely by the provincial department of education. But the structure of our society is changing so rapidly, locally and nationally, that courses of study should be flexible, and geared to preparation of our young people for the part they will be playing in the complex social structure of the near future.

The provincial department is responsible for the over-all direction of education from elementary to university levels, but it is the local school boards that are nearest to children and teachers in the elementary and secondary schools.

Consequently, it is quite logical that in addition to their present areas of responsibility, school boards should have a say in the curriculum of the elementary and secondary schools.

The purposes of education are manifold, including preparation of the student for the complex society in which he will be living, and development of his mental and physical talents and powers of creative thinking, which will enable him to play a useful role in our society.

With their practical knowledge of social life, school boards can play an important part in the guidance of curriculum in earlier levels of education, and the authorities at the provincial and municipal levels should take the steps necessary to give the school boards the power to play that part. — D. Swailes, 2169 McNeil Ave.

Dollar Bill View

Imagine my surprise the other day when I picked up my paper and read that Mayor Pollen favors cutting the trees in the Nitinat area. Is this the same man who does not wish high-rises in Victoria?

May I suggest Mayor Pollen is following in the footsteps of the people to whom we owe a blocked view of our beautiful mountains. They could not see Victoria for those dollar bills. Now Mayor Pollen cannot see the forest for the trees. How inconsistent can you get?

Don't worry, Mr. Pollen, about the old folks not getting to the beautiful Nitinat. All they want is for their children and grandchildren to have the wonder and beauty of our natural environment in this beautiful country of ours. We haven't got much left, so turn around, Mayor Pollen, before it's too late. — Charlotte Clapp, 600 Gorge Rd.

Abortion

There are many people in Victoria and elsewhere like myself who fervently hope that the Queen Victoria Hospital, formerly St. Joseph's, will never allow an abortion to darken and pollute its premises. We must do all in our power to prevent this dreadful crime in the new hospital.

The Queen, after which the hospital is called, herself had nine children and was most strenuous in her denunciation of

QUEEN VICTORIA

Now we are going backwards. Instead of stopping the killing of infants, in 1968 a primitive law was introduced into the federal parliament permitting abortion by a group of doctors sitting on a board of review. There is evidence that these doctors simply act as a rubber stamp and permit any abortion asked for. British Columbia is the chief province permitting wholesale slaughter of the unborn child, which is a living being, with a beating heart and breathing in its own particular way.

Have we ourselves the power and intelligence to cast our votes at the polls and put out a government or any government which lends its legislative power to promulgating such a crime? Let us act, and the sooner the better. — (Mrs.) Eva Welch, Crofton, B.C.

Fluoridation

Regarding your news item about the recently released Canadian National Research Council report on the subject of fluorides.

The Individual Rights Association welcomes the call of the report for concerted scientific investigation into the possibly negative effects on man's health resulting from the increasing addition of sodium fluoride to his environment.

Medical and dental associations have never done any scientific research because they are not scientific organizations, nevertheless endorsing the safety of fluoridation.

Last November the government of Sweden after a lengthy scientific investigation repealed their Fluoridation Act 1962 and passed an act prohibiting fluoridation because it was a violation of individual rights to force people to absorb sodium fluoride against their will and also because of the dangers to health.

Eleven other European governments now forbid or do not recommend fluoridation. The time has come when we should follow their example and forbid fluoridation. — H. S. Thuillier, President, Greater Victoria Individual Rights Association.

Evolution

I don't carry any particular brief for Saanich MLA Mr. Tisdalle. However I am amazed that any thinking person could make some of the statements made by J. Lloyd Brereton (Times March 6) in reply to comments by Mr. Tisdalle on teaching evolution.

If, as Brereton says, "no biologist has any doubts about evolution being a fact" why is it not known as the Law of Evolution rather than the Theory?

Dr. W. R. Thompson, previously Director of the Commonwealth Institute of Biological Control, Ottawa, states in his Introduction to Everyman's Library 1956 edition of The Origin of Species by Darwin: "The chronological succession of the fossils is also open to doubt, for it appears, generally speaking, that the age of the rocks is not determined by their intrinsic characteristics but by the fossils they contain; while the succession of the fossils is determined by the succession of the strata."

Also "The modern Darwinian palaeontologists are obliged, just like their predecessors and like Darwin, to water down the facts with subsidiary hypotheses, which however plausible, are in the nature of things unverifiable."

In a comprehensive study of fossil insects in Britain, G. R. Coope, Dept. of Geology, The University of Birmingham, England, says, "A somewhat unexpected outcome has been that, in my experience and that of my colleagues here at Birmingham, no fossil has yet shown intermediate features between known species, even though many thousands of specimens have been investigated from several dozen Quaternary sites."

I agree with Mr. Brereton that "the strain on any young person growing up in this world of scientific knowledge . . ." is great. It certainly does not make it easier for them, to be exposed to a series of unqualified "dogmatic" statements such as he has made. — Alan F. Hedlin, 5867 Old West Saanich Rd.

One of the Few

My wife and I recently visited your lovely city whose beauty resembles that of our own home town, San Francisco.

Victoria has the potential to become the major tourist attraction of the Northwest, if it manages to ward off greedy land developers and big money interests whose shopping centres and ugly highrises are beginning to blotch your city and destroy much of its charm.

In San Francisco we have been fighting these forces for years. We have found that the only way to defeat those who would engulf us in a stifling world of concrete, glass and steel is to pass the most stringent laws to ensure architectural conformity within the city.

I hope you continue to preserve your old and beautiful buildings, turn downtown streets into pedestrian malls and build mini-parks. If not, you will lose control of your city's destiny and you have only to look to Vancouver to see what will result.

Victoria is one of the few places in North America that still has a chance to preserve its beauty and urbanity. I wish you the best of luck — John Hileman, San Francisco.

A New Constitution But . . .

OTTAWA: According to the 30 learned parliamentarians who reported last Thursday, we stand in "urgent need" of a new constitution.

"Urgent," according to the Concise Oxford, means "pressing," "calling for immediate action or attention." The puzzling reality is that the need, thus discerned, is much less urgent than it was 40 years ago before Rowell-Sirois and its eventful aftermath. On any objective assessment, governments now are far freer to do what they think we want them to do than they were four decades ago.

But it is doubtless true, as the committee finds, that most Canadians want a new constitution — until they see it.

The project unveiled last week is not without interest. It recalls one of the more profound observations of this century; that a camel is a horse designed by a committee.

No one, apparently, is willing to profess unreserved admiration for the whole camel. Some think it should have more humps and some fewer. The number of minority reports suggests that others would prefer to haul the poor beast back to the drawing board.

No Total Disagreement

On the other hand, it would be very difficult to disagree with everything in the report. With so much camel, there are bound to be some parts which from some angles suggest a horse.

For the chapter on the head of state, there is nothing good to be said. It is an essay in the politics of expediency. The message to supporters of the monarchy is: Don't worry. The message to republicans is: Be of good cheer; deep in our hearts, we are on your side.

There is one further word. "We therefore support the evolutionary process by which the Governor General has been granted more functions as the head of state for Canada." If this is a reference to certain recent tours, the committee is for evolution by stealth because Parliament was never consulted about the changes which the East Block had in mind. What an attitude for a committee of constitutionalists.

On the senate, the committee has some sensible things to say; possibly because it included some very sensible senators. It rejects abolition but proposes a suspensive veto, as achieved many decades ago in backward Britain. It does not favor a special power in the Senate to confirm appointments of Supreme Court judges, ambassadors and heads of cultural agencies. This is an American practice and a good argument against it is American experience. On the other hand the committee accepts the view, already accepted by the government, that the provinces should have a voice (in fact a half share) in senatorial appointments.

The major change proposed for the House of Commons is a fixed four-year term, unless the government is defeated on a confidence vote or the House itself by formal resolution calls for dissolution. This is to achieve a "better balance" between the executive and the legislature. Evidently, then, the committee accepts the argument that we have moved too far towards cabinet (or prime ministerial) dictatorship.

But the thought is obscure. If the powers of the prime minister should be reduced, why ignore those which he has acquired in recent decades while taking away from him a power which prime ministers have always possessed under our system? There may be sound reasons for a dissolution other than those foreseen by the committee. And what is the significance for balance of the second recommendation? If a prime minister with a majority wants dissolution, presumably the House will give him the necessary resolution. If it will not, how can he be said to have the confidence of the majority? And if it acts against his will, he will have to go to the country as a defeated prime minister.

Plumping Up Senate

It is always interesting to observe the action of the parliamentary club when its own future is under consideration. The West has too few senators — 24 as compared with 30 for the Atlantic provinces. What is the solution? Reduce the Atlantic seats? Perish the thought. The proposal is that the "grand total" of senators from the provinces be increased by 24, with an additional four from the Yukon and Northwest Territories. Facing a smaller but still ticklish problem in the House, the committee reacts in the same way. Add six commoners, thus keeping everyone happy with the possible (and usual) exception of taxpayers.

On the general question of powers, the majority report rejects special status and also legislative delegation (except, perhaps dubiously, in the case of criminal law). There will probably be wide support, in theory, for the proposition that the federal government should have a large jurisdiction in economic matters affecting the country at large and that the provinces should have more scope in areas touching culture and social policy.

In practice, if negotiators ever catch up to the committeemen, we may doubtless look forward to a last ditch fight over property and civil rights.

Split That Threatens NDP

By DESMOND MORTON

(Morton is associate professor of history at the University of Toronto, and a member of the NDP Federal Council who opposed Waffle policies at the NDP leadership convention. He wrote this article for The Toronto Star.)

Are the New Democratic Party and its radical Waffle wing heading for a parting of the ways?

Some people obviously hope so. A resolution from a big Hamilton constituency association, demanding dissolution of the party faction, will be debated at the Ontario NDP's council meeting this month if backroom pressures fail to stop it. On the other side, many delegates at a big Waffle convention in early February openly favored a public split.

LEWIS

Carve the Chicken

With a federal election fast approaching, no serious party wants to expose its divisions. David Lewis has told television audiences that brotherhood and solidarity prevail in the ranks: The only dispute is about how best to carve up the Liberal chicken.

The Lewis smile looks a trifle rigid. The facts are that the Waffle has done what it promised after last April's NDP leadership convention; it has gone right on organizing as a separate group in the NDP.

It has hired an organizer, published newsletters, raised a substantial budget and issued public pronouncements which have usually won more attention than the party's official utterances.

In Ontario the Waffle has made gains — especially among constituency militants who oddly blame the NDP's "moderate" image for a failure to make gains in last October's Ontario election.

Alter Balance

The Waffle has also turned its attention on the labor movement. Last April, it was largely trade union votes that turned back Waffle convention resolutions by decisive majorities.

Trying to alter the balance, the Waffle has been out hunting for its own trade union friends. It was a foray into United Auto Worker territory that provoked January's public slanging match between Waffle Leader James Laxer and Canadian UAW director Dennis McDermott.

Signs are that the Wafflers are finding support, if only among the fringe of militants and elderly revolutionaries who form an opposition chorus in every major local of the big international unions.

Waffle gains have begun to alarm some moderate NDPers and trade unionists alike. Significantly, the most powerful argument used by Waffle leaders at the recent convention to soothe would-be bolters was that the group would soon be taking over the party. If that happened, moderates feel, most NDP supporters would leave by the other door.

Loving Care

Simply because the NDP represents 10 years of commitment, effort and tender loving care, it is unlikely that the moderates and trade union leaders who brought the party together will allow it to be captured and, in their view, destroyed.

On the other hand, Waffle activists are in no mood to accept permanent minority status. Mostly young, middle class and recent converts to radicalism, they had no share in the painful struggles that kept the NDP and the old CCF alive and growing. To them, it is ancient history.

Fragmentation, the special enemy of left-wing organizations, is back in fashion, along with a style in violent rhetoric and 1930s Marxism which led some people to term the Waffle "Bonnie and Clyde socialism."

Tensions are acute and growing, particularly between the Waffle and the NDP's trade union supporters. Between younger Wafflers and labor leaders there is a special hostility some attribute to social class, others to the generation gap. Perhaps the most powerful explanation is that both sides are consciously or unconsciously re-running the battles of the 1930s and '40s.

Tensions are high but so are the pressures for unity. In all the 40 years of the CCF-NDP there have been many bitter internal factional battles but there have been no permanent splits. The price has always been obvious — the likely permanent eclipse of any electorally effective party of the democratic left. That price would still have to be paid today.

The exodus of a substantial number of highly articulate and attractive people would give the media a field day. The same talents that have enabled Wafflers to nearly monopolize NDP coverage over the past few years would guarantee that their version of the truth prevailed. It would be in the interest of the NDP's enemies to see that it did.

Bow to Eggheads

Moreover, no one could predict how loyalties within the NDP itself might divide. As in most left-wing parties, there is an inordinate difference to intellectual leaders. The departure of a large share of the party's professors, proclaiming persecution, would leave many NDPers demoralized and uncertain.

On the other hand, leading Wafflers have good reason to pause as well. Much of their significance derives from their attachment to a party that gets votes from close to one Canadian in five. As a separate faction, they might well be a nine-day wonder, like Paul Hellyer's Action Canada.

Above all, to a degree more moderate NDPers sometimes fail to admit, many of the leaders in the Waffle have a basic commitment to their party. They shrink from the responsibility of shattering the only significant democratic socialist party in North America.

Pull Together

What the NDP needs may be a formula for internal party controversy that could modify, if not eliminate the charges of "a party within a party" from one side or of "anti-democratic oppression" from the other. The problem is not unique to the NDP.

If the Canadian party system is not to become hopelessly fragmented, all of them need machinery for genuine internal debate about ideology and, for that matter, about personalities as well. The public is going to have to learn to live with a little less than monolithic solidarity in its political parties if it wants them to be democratic.

However, the parties themselves will have to take responsibility for showing that, divided or not, they can still pull themselves together enough to form a government and carry out policies.

Instead of haranguing each other about purges and expulsions, New Democrats should be debating ground rules for civilized and principled conflict on platform, strategy and leadership.

For example, there should be a severe limitation on money spent to advance a factional cause and full disclosure of its sources. There should be a ban on hiring organizers and on issuing public statements save within an agreed period before a convention or comparable gathering.

Like most ground rules, enforcement would depend on collective feeling more than on legal niceties. The NDP as a whole would have to accept the occasional embarrassment of appearing to the world as it does to its members, a place of argument, friction and occasional folly. It will take even longer for the public to realize that it is not always well served by parties of monolithic solidarity and the NDP must bear some of the cost of that educational process.

However, the rewards would not be small either. In fact, as David Lewis claims, there is a broad agreement about democratic socialism within the NDP even if the tensions of too much self-analysis are greater than he would dare admit.

Price for Unity

A willingness to allow real, if civilized, argument is now the price for structural unity. Last year's leadership contest, right down to Lewis's own fourth ballot victory and the subsequent acclamation, was a demonstration of how such argument could be carried on.

There would be a wider benefit. NDPers' smugness about their party's internal democracy is not entirely ill-placed. The NDP, like the CCF before it, has had a distinct influence on the internal procedures of other Canadian parties. Finding a way of making the Waffle and other groups work within the party, not outside it, could be as major a contribution to the democratization of the Canadian political process as any the NDP has made in the past.

THE ELEPHANT SEAL

THE ENDANGERED SPECIES: THEY CAN BE SUSTAINED

By RICHARD SEVERO

MEXICO CITY — The bald eagle, brown pelican and other animal groups are still in danger of extinction, but at least five species thought to have been doomed appear to be making a comeback.

The reasons appear to lie in a combination of circumstances, ranging from governmental protection to simple inaccessability from hunters.

Dr. Carl L. Hubbs, a veteran marine biologist from the University of California's Scripps Institution of Oceanography, reported last weekend his findings on the five species to the 36th annual meeting of the U.S. National Wildlife Federation.

The five species he cited are the gray whale, sea otter, northern elephant seal, Guadalupe fur seal and the Juan Fernandez fur seal.

The gray whale, which had been considered virtually extinct, is now flourishing in two lagoons in Mexico's Baja California, Hubbs said. He added that the whale population now seems to be stabilizing itself at around 5,000 because that is all that the two lagoons can support. The gray whale is now approaching the number that existed when the whaling industry began, he said.

Hubbs said that credit for saving the whale is due to Mexico, whose President, Luis Echeverria, recently set aside one lagoon as a refuge and has refused to permit hunting the gray whale.

SEA OTTER
. . . population up

Hubbs also applauded the Mexicans for their efforts in saving the northern elephant seal, which now number about 15,000 on Guadalupe Island off the Baja coast. He noted that in 1892, only two of the seals were known to exist on the island. Another species of seal on the same island, known as the Guadalupe fur seal, has reached the population of 500.

The Guadalupe fur seal has been clinging to existence by remnants of the original thriving population for more than half a century and although it is now being deleted from the endangered list, it is still classified as "critically rare, in need of continued care," Hubbs said.

As for the sea otter, which had been driven to near extinction because of its prized fur, Hubbs said the population now numbers "several thousand" and is divided among the Aleutian Islands and both U.S. and Mexican portions of California.

In California, he said, the population has grown to several hundred, despite the depredations by abalone fishermen who blame the otters rather than themselves for depleting the abalone population.

The Juan Fernandez fur seal has made a modest comeback in the islands off the coast of Chile. It had been considered extinct. The animals are protected by law but poaching continues.

Hubbs' wife, Laura, who has collaborated with him in his work, said it appeared that the Juan Fernandez seal made a comeback mostly because few people knew it was there, aside from the island inhabitants. Estimated population now is about 500.

Living Off Others' Labor

By RICHARD NEEDHAM
The Globe and Mail

"Drink is the ruin of the working class." So it used to be said, and then some wit turned it around. "Work is the ruin of the drinking class." I'll take it further. Work is the ruin of just about everybody, and isn't that how it began?

Read your Bible. Adam and Eve were in the Garden of Eden, loafing around with nothing to do but watch Flip Wilson, play tic-tac-toe and do crossword puzzles. Then the serpent came along, corrupting Eve to the point where she went rushing out to buy pantyhose for herself and Bermuda shorts for her companion. In consequence, they both got slung out by God with this curse, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread."

Ever since then, practically all men have worked, and most men have disliked it. I'm willing to guess that out of every 100 men (and women) employed in offices, factories, mines, etc., perhaps 10 (I'm being generous) enjoy it, perhaps 40 are bored by it, perhaps 50 dislike or detest it. In Japan and China and Germany, the figures might be different, I don't know; but I think they're reasonably correct for the Anglo-Saxon world I live in.

As noted above, a few people enjoy their work, and I'm one of them. When I tootle down to the office on a Saturday or Sunday, the taxi driver says, "You're working today?" I say yes, and he comments, "That's tough," to which I answer no, I love it, I can hardly wait till I get there. This, I'm sure tempts him to take me straight to the Clarke Institute and bundle me through the door — "This guy's sick, he needs help."

I know teachers and doctors and businessmen who feel the same way as I do. Their work's a joy to them, so it isn't really work. But with most people, it's different. Their work's boring or downright distasteful; they look forward to days off, holidays, retiring on pension, or winning first prize in the sweepstake. Or again, they look forward to being fired or laid off, because then they can collect unemployment insurance or welfare — get paid for not working, and wouldn't most of us deem that an ideal existence?

It's here that I part company with politicians, newspapers, social reformers and such. They talk of unemployment as a terrible calamity, a catastrophic blow that right now is ruining the lives of some 660,000 Canadians.

First of 3 Columns

Oh, the shame of it, the suffering, the sorrow! But the unemployed people I know aren't suffering any pain, and one at least would appear, as the saying goes, to have it made.

This is an Ottawa divorcee, mother of two children, who normally works as a saleslady. When she works, she clears about $55 a week after taxes; when she's unemployed, as she is right now and intends to keep on being, she gets $50 a week unemployment insurance. By the time you take off the very real expenses of a daily job — carfare, lunches, drycleaning, etc. — she makes more money by not working than she makes by working; and isn't that her first obligation to her children — to make as much money for them as she can?

There are other advantages to her unemployed condition. She can be home more with the kids and take better care of them. She has all sorts of time to read, travel, see plays and movies. She can go back to bed after the kids are off to school. In short, she's got the best of both worlds — freedom and (till her unemployment benefits run out next July) security. And after that? Well, there's always welfare.

I wouldn't say this woman is wicked or lazy or parasitic; I'd just say she's human like the rest of us, and like the rest of us tends to follow the line of least resistance. In his great book, Memoirs of a Superfluous Man (now in paperback, hurrah) Albert Jay Nock says that if self-preservation is the first law of life, the second law is exploitation — living (if you can manage it) off the labors of others.

We've created a society in which very large numbers of able-bodied people can and do live off the labors of others — not just the 660,000 Canadians who are officially unemployed, but a vast horde of people in the high schools, universities and community colleges. There are 1.8 million "students" in Canada's secondary schools and about 600,000 "students" in Canada post-secondary colleges.

I'd say without hesitation that at least two-thirds of these able-bodied people — some 1.6 million — shouldn't be in classrooms at all, they're learning nothing, they should be out working. But we've no work for them, so we encourage and reward them — bribe them — to "stay in school." They're what I would call the hidden unemployed, and you get a grand total of well over 2,000,000. I'll return to this subject tomorrow.

Tories Pick Allan McKinnon for Ottawa

Victoria's Progressive Conservatives Wednesday evening confirmed school board chairman Allan McKinnon as their candidate in the next federal election.

"I think of myself not as a right or a left-winger," McKinnon said following his uncontested nomination. "I believe the rights of the individual are very important and whenever there is a choice between government making decisions for the individual or the individual having his own choice, I am for the individual. . . ."

McKinnon, 55, is a school teacher in Sooke, and has resided in Victoria since 1965 when he retired from the Royal Canadian Army. He told about 220 Tories in the ballroom at the Empress Hotel following his nomination that he has already made provision for a leave-of-absence to allow him full-time campaigning when an election is called.

McKinnon, who was nominated by Dr. G. Scott Wallace, Oak Bay Conservative MLA, said following the meeting he is greatly encouraged by the doubling Wednesday evening of the provincial Tory legislature ranks.

South Peace River MLA Donald Marshall, formerly a Social Credit member, crossed the floor to sit with Wallace as a Conservative.

"If it does this every day (doubles)," McKinnon said, "Soon we'll be where we should be in B.C."

McKinnon said there will be three main issues in the next federal election campaign. They are:

—The "tragic economic mismanagement" of Canada in the past four years.

—The "downgrading of parliamentary democracy."

—Prime Minister Trudeau's and the Liberal party's "callous treatment of what I call the unprotected people."

Parliamentary democracy, McKinnon said, suffered immeasurably with the attempt "to neuter" Auditor-General Maxwell Henderson's office and "when that failed, the more recent cowardly attack on Maxwell Henderson himself."

McKinnon pledged, if elected, to fight for the unprotected, unrepresented segments of society — old age pensioners, small businessmen and "a group that doesn't appear to fit with the others but is actually being harmed as well," youth.

Policy Muddy on Moran Dam?

Will the real government policy in the Moran dam please become clear?

Resources Minister Ray Williston told the legislature Wednesday that studies on the feasibility of the dam are being conducted by the B.C. Energy Board, but he didn't know anything about it.

Then he said it wasn't government policy to build the dam anyway. But then he said the dam would only be built, if the public wanted it, for flood-control purposes on the Fraser River.

It all started in debate of Williston's responsibilities for B.C.'s water resources when Robert Strachan (NDP—Cowichan-Malahat) waved a sheaf of papers before committee chairman George Mussallem, papers he said showed the government is promoting the dam.

Strachan said he found the documents available to the public accounts committee that the government spent $18,600 in February and May, 1971, for research on the feasibility of the dam.

Strachan said the money was paid to John Sexton of Montreal whose consulting firm is doing the work for the energy board.

The board is reporting on provincial energy requirements to 1985. Its work is to become public in May or June. Many fisheries experts believe the dam will destroy the Fraser's salmon runs.

Strachan is unable to get detailed expenses for this fiscal year, but he said the board wrote to deputy provincial secretary Lawrie Wallace last November saying its final consulting work bill would go between $1.25 million and $1.5 million.

"All this money can't go for surveys. Some of it must be going for drilling. What's the government position on the Moran dam?" Strachan said.

"This is not one of my responsibilities under this vote and there is no way I can debate that situation," Williston said.

Opposition MLAs broke into laughter when he then said: "Moran dam will not be built as a power development project. If the people determine in the course that it's a flood-control measure, that's fine."

"You just shoved it off into the B.C. Energy Board so you wouldn't have to answer questions tonight," Strachan said.

Opposition Leader Dave Barrett asked whether it was government policy to build the dam for any purpose other than flood control.

After Williston said no, Barrett said: "If it's government policy not to build the dam, what are these studies going on for?"

Williston finally gave up trying to debate the issue after he said he too wouldn't know what the energy board is doing until the report is released.

B.C. 'SHOULD BUY UP' ISLAND FOREST LANDS

A tri-level government program to buy parkland in the Gulf Islands was urged in the legislature Wednesday by Frank Ney (SC—Nanaimo).

He suggested a $15 million three-level plan to purchase recreation land in the islands from logging companies.

He said the Capital Regional District wants such land preserved and could work in co-operation with the provincial and federal governments to buy the land.

If the land is ever logged it would be a real loss, Ney said, describing the highest value of the land as for recreational purposes.

Ney's suggestion came during debate on Resources Minister Ray Williston's departmental spending estimates which were approved at 12.10 a.m. today.

Alex Macdonald (NDP—Vancouver East) called for tax "bonuses" to bona fide residents of B.C. holding lands under Williston's jurisdiction.

He said the measure would help recapture the equity in B.C. lands already lost to foreign owners.

Liberal Leader Pat McGeer expressed concern that Canadians are being discriminated against by the lands department's handling of the "lease-develop-purchase" policy on crown lands.

He suggested that the bad experience of the department in Cypress Bowl and Powder Mountain where "cut-and-run" Canadians had failed to deliver promised ski developments was affecting the rights of Canadians to lease, develop and purchase northern lands.

POISONING

"Canadians in the Cariboo and Omineca are being handicapped by the minister's decision not to pursue the lease-develop purchase plan," McGeer said. He suggested a change of policy to help Canadians.

On pollution control, Dennis Cocke (NDP—New Westminster) asked Williston to investigate the incidence of cadmium poisoning in B.C.

He cited studies showing cadmium, unlike mercury, isn't excreted at all from the human body and is more toxic than mercury. He said samples of food in Trail showed cadmium at 10 times the level considered safe.

Williston said he would look into the question.

Leo Nimsick (NDP—Kootenay) said the government hasn't done anything to eliminate pollution but simply licenses it. He criticized federal environment minister Jack Davis for saying the economic situation has softened the attack on pollution in pulp mills.

"Life comes first — we've got to clean up pollution regardless of profits and regardless of jobs," he said.

Cliff Erosion Ignored

The provincial government will not move to halt erosion of Crown land at the University of British Columbia, Resources Minister Ray Williston told Garde Gardom (L—Vancouver-Point Grey) Wednesday.

Gardom said in the legislature that the Point Grey cliffs are eroding at the rate of 1½ feet a year, and this threatens buildings in Cecil Green Park.

He asked whether any of the $233,000 in Williston's lands branch estimates marked for construction of waterworks would be spent shoring up the cliffs at Point Grey.

Williston said no. The minister told Gardom many people in Vancouver feel the lands should be turned over to the city for administration by the parks board.

Gardom angrily replied that it was "cheap garbage and stupid" for Williston to evade government responsibility for taking care of their lands.

Williston asked Gardom for a positive suggestion. Gardom said the province should spend $400,000 protecting the shore land. He said the main building in the park is only 100 feet from the cliffs.

Williston made a note of Gardom's remarks.

Bill Limits Tax-Free Gifts

Premier Bennett introduced a new gift tax act in the legislature Wednesday, replacing a similar bill presented earlier in this session, which restricts the right of B.C. residents to make tax-free gifts to the federal government and to charity.

The previous bill allowed tax-free gifts to the federal government, but that section is deleted in the new legislation. However, tax-free gifts to the provincial government and to municipalities are permitted.

The earlier bill also allowed tax-free gifts to charities. The new act exempts only gifts to charities that will be spent within the province and can be used at the absolute discretion of the charity.

The change would make it impossible for someone to make a tax-free gift to a B.C. university for a specific purpose, for example.

Kaiser Mine Shakeup

OAKLAND, Calif. (CP) — Kaiser Resources Ltd. announced Wednesday the election of Stephen A. Giard as president, chief executive officer, director and a member of the executive committee of the subsidiary of Kaiser Steel Corp.

He suceeeds C. Lee Emerson, who submitted his resignation Wednesday after 30 years with the Kaiser organization.

In other Kaiser Resources management actions at a meeting here, the Kaiser board elected Edgar F. Kaiser Jr., eldest son of industrialist Edgar F. Kaiser, as a director and executive vice-president of operations; Roland A. Kjelland as a director and executive vice-president, administration and finance; and Edgar F. Kaiser Sr. as a member of the executive committee.

Kaiser chairman Jack L. Ashby said Giard has 33 years experience in heavy construction and international business management, including 10 years as president of Kaiser Jeep Corp. He and his two new executive vice-presidents have been reviewing the entire operations of Kaiser Resources and will establish new corporate headquarters in Vancouver.

Kaiser Resources owns coal deposits in eastern British Columbia, mined through open-pit operations for shipment to Japan.

Kaiser Resources also announced Wednesday the resignations of three directors, C. Fred Borden, Robert G. Heers and C. A. Macilvaine.

Ashby said Heers and Macilvaine now will devote full-time to their responsibilities with Kaiser Steel Corp. Emerson and Borden will continue as directors of Kaiser Steel.

Simpsons-Sears

A rights offering to shareholders of Simpsons-Sears Ltd. will raise about $25 million to reduce debt and permit continued expansion of retail store outlets.

Terms will be set after the company's April 6 annual meeting.

The major shareholders — Simpsons Ltd. and Sears Roebuck and Co. of Chicago — indicate they will subscribe for additional shares under terms of the offering.

Between them they own all the B and C class stock, or voting shares. The non-voting A shares, of which 2.56 million are outstanding, are publicly-held.

N. Electric

Efforts to increase efficiency in 1971 led to net earnings more than three times the level of 1970, report Northern Electric Co. Ltd.

The Montreal firm had consolidated sales of $576.29 million, an increase of $12.68 million, while profit rose from $4 million ($2.24 a share) to $12.6 million ($6.96).

There was major reorganization of the company last year, including establishment of a U.S. subsidiary, Northern Telecom Inc., for access to the American market.

Dunhill

Consolidation of two operating subsidiaries into one corporate entity under a new name has been approved by shareholders of United Provincial Investments Ltd.

Dunhill Development Corp. Ltd. is the new title, embodying the Greater Vancouver activities, assets and management of W. K. P. Construction Ltd. and United Provincial Investments. Full integration of their raw land development, property management, real estate marketing and construction phases results.

Subsidiary companies remaining will also have the new name Dunhill in their titles — Dunhill Realty Ltd. and Dunhill Homes Ltd. — except for Fisher Developments Ltd.

Campeau

Campeau Corp. Ltd. reports Power Corp. has agreed to sell 6.28 million common shares back to Campeau.

Campeau said it would pay $4.50 a share for its stock, totalling $28.29 million.

The company said the proposal, to be submitted to Campeau shareholders, is conditional upon Campeau completing negotiations for a $27 million term loan, expected by April 4.

Pending approval, Campeau Corp. will also buy Power Corp.'s holding of 1 million 20-cent par value Class B preference shares.

The plan also requires approval of an Ontario Supreme Court judge.

Afton

Assays from diamond and percussion drilling on its Kamloops copper property indicate extension of the ore body west of the lake, reports Afton Mines Ltd.

For distances of up to 360 feet, assays show ore of apparent commercial value in three sections of drill core from hole 72-3 and in seven percussion holes, mainly in the same zone.

A rotary drill, from which assays were reported previously, also is working on the property.

S-S Acceptance

Notice of a public offering of secured debentures has been filed with securities commissions by Simpsons-Sears Acceptance Co. Ltd. Details will be set later.

The company, which operates the stores, warehouses and catalogue sales offices of Simpsons-Sears Ltd. in Canada, is wholly owned by Simpsons Ltd., of Toronto, and Sears Roebuck and Co., of Chicago.

WHAT STUDENTS WANT:

. . . security first; money second

BOSSES FELT PUPILS WANTED:

efficiency first; productivity second

VANCOUVER (CP) — University students preparing to enter business are more concerned about security and money than any employers believe.

This is the conclusion of a recent survey carried out by fourth-year commerce students at the University of British Columbia which found a wide disparity between how students and business leaders viewed themselves and how they viewed each other.

The survey involved 105 businessmen, most of them personnel managers in the Greater Vancouver area, and 82 commerce students.

The majority of students, most under 30 years of age, listed security and money, in that order, as their top priorities as they prepare to enter the business world.

Judy Armstrong, a member of the survey team, said the businessmen surveyed "expected that the students would be much more idealistic and more interested in social values."

Students were equally surprised by the fact that the management group, almost all over 30, listed security at the bottom of their list of priorities, far below growth of the organization, concern for employees, efficiency and productivity.

EXPLAINS CHOICE

Ian Goldie, one of a class of 24 that carried out the survey, said the students' desire for security "is probably brought about partly by present economic conditions, where getting a job simply can't be taken for granted."

"Then, too, the majority of students are still interested in the idea of settling down and raising a family — despite popular concepts to the contrary."

Mr. Goldie said students often incur heavy debts gaining their education and believe that "if they can be assured of a constant flow of money, it'll put them back on their feet again."

Phillip H. White, dean of the UBC faculty of commerce and business, told a Chamber of Commerce meeting there are "unrealistic expectations" on both sides.

Basically, he said, students expect industry to provide career oportunities without demanding maturity and experience; industry expects unquestioning acceptance of traditional practices as a qualification for eventual success.

Dean White said business students possess a great deal of theoretical knowledge, not backed by practical experience.

"But business demands experience and students are not willing to undergo the tediousness of learning about a company operation in order to contribute to it."

He said dissension between students and industry is partly the fault of industry because it is unwilling to adapt to new situations or to explain why a certain job is done in a certain way.

Williston Urged to Quit Over Bulkley

By BRUCE YEMEN
And PETER McNELLY
Times Staff

Opposition Leader Dave Barrett called for the resignation of Forests Minister Ray Williston Wednesday for what he called his "shocking" handling of the Bulkley Valley forest industry crisis.

Barrett charged Williston had allowed Bulkley Valley Forest Products Ltd. to break an agreement with the government for construction of a pulp mill and then to sell out public forest as company assets to another private group after getting into financial trouble.

Williston denied any contract had been broken because the company had never received the go-ahead on the mill. He said he agreed with many of Barrett's arguments but declined to resign.

Barrett recalled that last year he had described how the Bulkley Valley firm had "surreptitiously" and without interference from Williston acquired small sawmills — and timber quotas — in the Houston area, destroying the economic base of small forest firms in the area.

Barrett said Williston "knows" in his heart" he should resign for "mishandling resources" in the Houston area.

He said Williston had allowed the company to break its contract with the government and then "slide out of its responsibilities" by selling the public forest rights as an asset to another company.

"The quotas should have reverted to the crown right then and there," Barret said. "The quotas should never have become an asset of the company."

Barrett said last year when he raised the issue of the destruction of "a way of life" in the north by the Bulkley Valley firm, Williston had heaped abuse on him and told him he knew nothing about economics.

Barrett said Williston defended the company then by saying "performance is the name of the game."

But now the company has failed to perform and another company has been allowed to take over.

"He says Northwood Pulp still has to perform. I'll bet that really scares them," he said.

Barrett said he had expected Williston would have resigned long ago over the failure of private enterprise to perform to contract in Cypress Bowl where logging was carried out for a ski development prior to a bankruptcy.

"Five years of fiddle diddle and hanky panky," Barrett shouted as Recreation Minister Ken Kiernan interrupted him on the Cypress Bowl issue. The government took over Cypress bowl more than a year ago and is now developing it as a park.

Williston said Barrett's arguments were "basically valid and basically correct," but he said there was no reason for him to resign.

Had this failure come with public funds, Williston said, not only he but also the government could be expected to resign.

"If that had been my responsibility as minister and that had been your money, I would agree I should resign and maybe the whole government should resign."

He said Bulkley Valley never violated any agreement, the company never received permission to build the pulp mill.

The company didn't have plans for a clean enough operation and the government wasn't going to allow it to pollute any streams, Williston said.

He emphasized that the wood in the area does not belong to Northwood and access rights have not been sold. Williston said Northwood is going to have problems with the sawmill producing enough to meet the requirements of the quotas they received when they bought out Bulkley Valley.

He ruled out dispersing cutting rights in the area among smaller operators because this "might dissipate the chances of making Houston viable in the future."

"All Northwood was getting was a sawmill which was not completely operational."

The minister admitted his department didn't approve the design of Bulkley Valley's mill, but he said top B.C. engineers went to Sweden and Norway and came back with plans they liked.

His department is now checking the design of new mills to ensure they can operate efficiently in B.C., Williston said.

Dudley Little (SC-Skeena) charged that the forest service is the "poorest" department of government and that the deputy minister of forests and B.C.'s chief forester should be retired.

He said younger men should be hired and it wouldn't do to say the government couldn't afford it.

"We have three high-priced men on the mediation commission doing nothing," Little said.

Government policy in the north, he said, has put 1,000 men out of work who had jobs two years ago. Little said small sawmills should have been kept open.

"Put the small sawmills back into business. Thats' the only way to create forest jobs in the north."

Williston defended his deputy and chief forester, saying, "I would stand the B.C. forest service and its officers against any group of officers who have ever been assembled in Canada."

Liberal Leader Pat McGeer said Little "if he had any self respect" wouldn't have attacked the civil service, he would have attacked Williston.

"In his heart he knows he was off base in trying to place the blame on the civil service," McGeer said.

Wings Just One Back After Leafs Tie Habs

By The Canadian Press

A tie, is a tie, is a tie, and nobody was more aware of it early in the 1971-72 National Hockey League season than Johnny McLellan.

The Toronto Maple Leaf coach was answering critics who chided the Leafs for playing for ties earlier in the season rather than going all out for a win.

"Look at all the games we lost by one goal last year that, if we'd tied, we might have made things interesting for Montreal if we'd played for ties," recalled McLellan, now recuperating from an ulcer attack after watching his Leafs waste away a solid fourth place standing in the East.

The Leafs, who had eight ties a year ago, made it No. 14 for the current campaign Wednesday night, a comeback 3-3 stalemate with Montreal Canadiens while Detroit Red Wings closed within one point of Toronto's once-secure playoff spot by demolishing Los Angeles Kings 6-3.

Elsewhere, Buffalo Braves acted as spoilers with a 4-3 win over playoff-hungry Pittsburgh Penguins while St. Louis Blues tripped California Golden Seals 4-1 to take a firm grip on third in the West.

McLellan wasn't behind the bench in Montreal Wednesday night. His ulcer has kept him in the background since Feb. 22 when the Leafs blew a four-goal lead in a 5-4 loss at Detroit.

He was expected to rejoin the Toronto club for their crucial game in Vancouver Friday against the Canucks.

Canadiens Moved into 3-0 Lead

The Canadiens, who had won four of the previous five meetings between the two clubs this year, opened fast and pressed the Leafs throughout the first period.

Montreal opened a 3-0 lead before the Toronto club found its skating legs and completed the comeback with Jim Harrison's power-play goal with less than two minutes remaining.

BREAKS MOORE'S MARK

Montreal left winger Frank Mahovlich, who counted his 42nd goal, established a club record for left wingers, breaking the mark of 41 he shared with now-retired Dickie Moore.

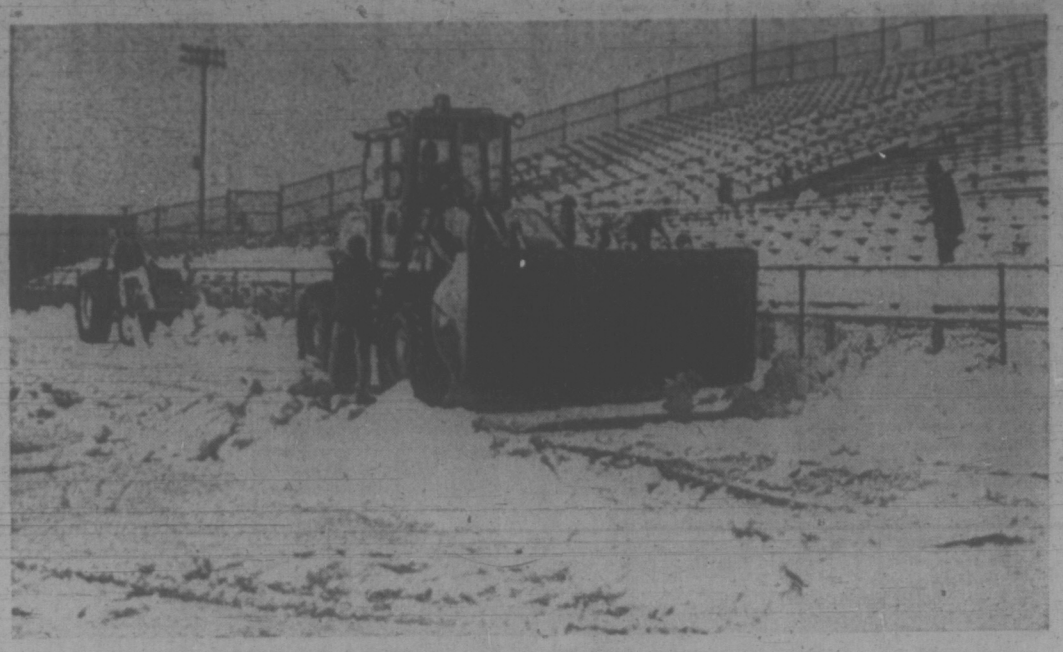
"That point is the one that could well put us in the playoffs," said King Clancy, Toronto's interim coach." . . . I think we could have beaten them tonight if it hadn't been for that goalie of theirs."

Montreal's Ken Dryden pulled off several key saves as the Leafs applied pressure, particularly late in the game, which prompted Clancy to wonder out loud, "how Detroit ever managed to score seven goals" against the lanky netminder in a 7-6 Red Wings win last Sunday.

Rookie Marcel Dionne, making a bid for late-season ballots in the Calder Trophy race, scored twice and set up two others to lead the Wings at Los Angeles.

It was a must game for the Red Wings, who now have 73 points to the Leafs' 74. The Wings, however, have only four games left to Toronto's five.

Both clubs have a tough road ahead. Detroit faces three of the NHL's top four clubs—Boston, New York, Montreal and Chicago—in the stretch, which includes three games away from home, while the Leafs engage the same four teams three times but have two games at home.



BASEBALL ANYONE? It might be difficult to find anybody in Montreal in mood for baseball and Montreal Expos may have trouble getting field in condition for their scheduled National League home opener on April 7. You Must Know 'System' To Understand Judging Surely, you must have heard about "The System." After all it comes from the "bible," which in this case is the International Skating Union rule book.

But let's start at the beginning. You switch on the Tely for the Olympic figure skating championships, the world, or the nationals, and suddenly that judge at the far end is giving everybody a 5.6 mark or lower. Meanwhile, elsewhere, there's a 5.9, and a 5.8, and pretty soon the TV announcer is casting aspersions at this particular judge. If he's reflecting the audience, it's because the crowd is probably roaring its dissent at the low scoring. And that's not all. Even the skaters make rude faces on camera when they see how low they've been scored.

The poor guy, maybe from Russia, is getting it from all sides. "That Iron Curtain judge . . ." or words like that.

But hold it. Much of the abuse may be completely unwarranted. Perhaps all of it. And all because of ignorance. Frankly, most of the people watching figure skating haven't got a clue to what's going on; and that goes for some of the skaters too.

The reason: They just don't understand "The System."

The key to the issue is that judging skating is a comparative game. It is not a competition between the judges to see who can give the highest marks, or the lowest marks, because the points awarded the skaters mean nothing by themselves. The final positions in figure skating are determined, not by points, but by the lowest number of ordinals awarded by the majority of the panel of judges. An ordinal is the highest mark a judge has awarded. For instance if one judge gaves one skater a 5.9, (the highest mark he has awarded), and another judge gives that skater a 5.6 (the highest mark he has awarded) both marks are equal in ordinals, a "1" for first place. The skater rates the best of those competing in the opinion of both judges, even though the points are not the same.

Now take the case of a third judge. He may have rated that very same skater a 5.8. But this is not his highest mark. He has given a 5.9 to another skater. So the 5.8 is only second best. Therefore, the 5.6, rating that supposedly low mark, is really higher than the 5.8, in the skater's eventual ranking.

That's where the comparative angle is evident. Judges compare skaters against one another. It's a relative evaluation of talent, and if a judge starts with a 5.6 for skater No. 1, and there's none better in his opinion in those who follow, then 5.6 is his high mark. It has to be.

What about the points?

First of all, don't even try to figure out where a competitor stands. Accountants do this. In singles competition each mark given for compulsory figures is multiplied by a set factor for each figure, and these totals are kept singly for each skater. In freestyle, two marks are given, one for technical merit, and one for artistic impression. Each of these marks is also multiplied by a set factor, and the totals kept.

Marks are then totalled, and the overall ordinal mark for each judge is assigned to that particular skater. And it is the majority of the panel of nine judges which decides the final placing.

The lowest number of ordinals is more often than not accompanied by the highest number of cumulative points. But a winner, with the lowest number of ordinals, can also be only second best in points. So points don't mean that much. In case of a tie in ordinals? That's easy. There are five tie breakers that can be used before points are considered.

One of the problems facing judges is that they are under tremendous pressure not to mark anybody lower than 5.0 in world or international competition, which results in having to place between 20 and 35 skaters somewhere between 5.0 and 6.0, the highest mark.

For example, a skater may be better than a 5.5 a judge has already awarded, but not as good as a 5.6, he also has given out. That skater then gets only a 5.5 even if he or she may deserve more.

And if judges sometimes make mistakes (and they do err), that's why there are nine of them on the panel. The majority has the final say.

And that, friends, is "The System," or a small part of it. So give that judge a break, eh. You may be the one who is biased.

Bruins Drop Appeal Plan

MONTREAL (CP) — President Clarence Campbell of the National Hockey League said Wednesday night that Boston Bruins apparently have decided to withdraw their appeal of a decision he announced earlier in the day.

Campbell had announced that left-winger Wayne Cashman of the Bruins and centre Dennis Hextall of Minnesota North Stars each had been suspended for three games for a stick-swinging incident last Sunday in Boston.

The Bruins originally had planned to appeal Cashman's suspension but Campbell said he had been notified by telephone of the withdrawal by an official of the Boston club, who assured him written confirmation would follow.

In addition, Campbell had fined Cashman $200 for a stick attack on Hextall and doled out two $50 fines to the latter for spearing and injuring the Boston player.

Had the Bruins gone through with the appeal, Cashman would have been free to play for Boston until such time as a hearing of the case by the league's board of governors. Campbell said earlier that a tentative date of April 4 had been set for the meeting.

"Any order of suspension or expulsion or any fine in excess of $200 may be appealed," Campbell said. "They must decide whether or not I acted reasonably in reaching my decision."

HOME GAMES

Cashman will miss the Bruins' games against New York Rangers tonight, Chicago Black Hawks Saturday night and Montreal Canadiens Sunday night. All three games are scheduled for Boston Garden.

Campbell said earlier that if Cashman played against the Rangers, the Bruins would not be allowed to withdraw their appeal at a later date. Instead, Boston stood a chance to lose the winger for the first three Stanley Cup playoff games, which begin April 6.

Hextall had already started his forced layoff by the time Campbell announced the three-game suspension. The Minnesota forward had been banned from a Tuesday night game against California Golden Seals.

Baseball Owners Refuse to Budge

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — Baseball owners refused to budge Wednesday on players' demands for increased pension and medical benefits, intensifying the threat of a player strike March 31.

"We voted to take a stand," Gussie Busch, owner of St. Louis Cardinals, said after a four-hour meeting of the 24 major league club owners.

"We voted unanimously. We're not going to give them another damned cent. "If they want to strike, let 'em."

Players on many of the clubs already have voted to strike March 30 if the owners refuse to come through with greater contributions to the pension and insurance programs.

The season is scheduled to open April 5.

The owners' negotiator, John Gaherin, said he would meet Friday in Phoenix, Ariz. with the players' lawyer, Marvin Miller, to reopen negotiations.

BRUINS BACK IN ACTION

New Westminster Bruins, suspended earlier this week by the B.C. Amateur Hockey Association, are now officially back in action in the Western Canada Hockey League.

Ray Peebles of Quesnel, president of the BCAHA, revoked the suspension Wednesday after receiving a cheque for $1,600 to cover the provincial body's assessment.

Saints Start Tourney With Impressive Mark

First United Saints, under coach Moe Turner, are carrying quite an impressive list of laurels into the Canadian juvenile girls' basketball championship tournament, starting Friday at Central Junior High School.

Saints have been together as a club for six years and have won five consecutive provincial crowns while rising together through the age classifications.

This season, the Victoria club has concentrated on playing exhibition games against senior competition.

During their most recent encounter, Saints lost by only eight points to the Canadian senior women's champion University of Victoria Vikettes. The main strength of the club seems to lie in depth and experience rather than the individual ability of one or two key players. Nearly all the players have been with the club for the full six years and their tactics include full-court and half-court presses as well as a fast-break style of attack.

Other squads in the double-loss elimination tourney are Hamilton Steelworkers, St. Stephens (N.B.) Spartans, Calgary Premier Athletic Club Kay Gees and Salmon Arm Jewels.

Play begins at 4 p.m. Friday, 10 a.m. Saturday and concludes with the final at 1 p.m. Sunday.

Nick Mileti Adds Indians To Empire

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — The purchase of controlling interest in the Cleveland Indians baseball club by Nick Mileti from Vernon Stouffer was approved by American League club owners Wednesday.

The acquisition gives Mileti control of three of Cleveland's four major sports franchises. The 40-year-old businessman also owns controlling shares in the Cavaliers of the National Basketball Association and the Barons of the American Hockey League.

He has no interest in the Cleveland Browns football team, owned by Art Modell.

It was the second time the owners considered the sale of the club to Mileti, who heads an eight-man group. The terms presented at the first meeting did not meet with the approval of the directors.

"The owners suggested a few changes," Mileti said at a news conference. "They let us know what they wanted and the changes were very reasonable, so we made them."

The terms of the sale were not disclosed but reports were that more than $9 million was involved.

Lampson Takes Basketball Title

Bram Russell fired 25 points Wednesday to pace Lampson to a 36-29 victory over Hampton in the elementary school boys' basketball final at Colquitz Junior High School.

Lampson led 22-15 at the intermission.

Vernon Foursome Led B.C. Juniors

KAMLOOPS (CP) — Vernon players took the four top places in the B.C. Junior Hockey League scoring race during the regular schedule, with two of them — John Price and Ernie Gare — tied for first place with 133 points apiece.

They were tied going into the last three games of the schedule and matched each other point for point.

Bays, Spartans In Rugby Final

Oak Bay Bays will attempt to wrest the Howard Russell Cup from Claremont Spartans in the Victoria High School Rugby League playoff final Friday night at Royal Athletic Park.

Spartans, winners of the title for the past four season, and Bays, who hold the league record of nine straight victories, will meet beginning at 8 p.m.

Spartans have chalked up an impressive record this season, winning all 12 matches and finishing four points ahead of Bays. The Claremont club rang up 370 points while allowing only 43 against.

Back to full strength after being plagued with injuries for several weeks, Spartans will likely rely heavily on captain Ken Macrae, a husky break-forward, and the superb soccer-style kicking of standoff-half Tim Lott.

The Ed Kubek coached Spartans seem to have the edge in forwards but Bays, under coach Frank Gower, possibly have a better backline.

Oak Bay scored 287 points and allowed 54 while finishing the season with only two losses — both to Spartans.

Expected to set the tone for Bays' backline are standoff-half Neil Rahn, outside centre Terry Morton and winger Dave Reid.

Racing Dates Decided

VANCOUVER (CP) — The 1972 horse racing season at Exhibition Park in Vancouver will open May 3 and wind up Oct. 9, the British Columbia Jockey Club has announced.

There will be racing on Mondays, Wednesdays, Fridays and Saturdays, with post time 6:30 p.m. on weekdays and 1:15 p.m. Saturdays and holidays.

The Jockey Club schedule lists 92 days of racing — 17 days in May, June and August, 18 days in July and September, and five days in October.

A spokesman for the club said the dates must be approved by the provincial and federal governments, but this was just a formality.

The decision to conduct a 92-day meeting, instead of a 71-day program announced earlier, was made following settlement of an involved dispute over taxes on parimutuel betting.

Minimum purse this season will be $1,400.

Steelhead Run Hit Hard By Commercial Fishing

The magnitude of the loss of steelhead to the commercial fishery is being viewed as a disaster to the steelhead sports-fishery. The concern is based upon the large take, estimated by some at 80 per cent of the total catch, of steelhead kelts.

Unlike salmon, about 20 per cent of spawning steelhead will recover from the trauma of the spawning run to spawn a second time. These two-year fish are the elite of the population, being the strongest and the most adapted to survive. They are also the lunker trophy steelhead, weighing over 15 pounds and occasionally over 20.

Their loss to commercial fishery which dubs them "snakes" (because of their emanciated condition and low fat value) is unforgivable to steelhead anglers.

One area of particular concern, according to assistant chief of fisheries Ron Thomas of the Fish and Wildlife Branch, is Area 12, Johnstone Strait north. It was in this area that all kelts tagged in a recent study from the Big Qualicum River were commercially caught.

Working from the 1970 commercial catch statistics, Thomas states, "1,664 steelhead were taken in that area (1,523 in gill nets, 79 by seines and 62 trollers). In the period June 14 to July 18, 1,148 steelhead were taken by gill nets, 29 by seines and 44 by trollers. Thus, about 73 per cent of the total steelhead catch in that area was taken in a 35-day period and very likely was made up of a substancial percentage of kelts."

The Puntledge River, once the fishiest stream on Vancouver Island, produced not a single fish in the weekend Annual Courtenay Fish and Game Club Steelhead Derby.

The river was literally flogged by many of the 76 participants in the derby. However, there was nary an entry even though derby headquarters was at the Clubhouse, which is situated on the riverbank near some of the best pools.

Truly, this has to be the angler's lament — the loss of this great fish stream to unilateral hydro development.

Up Island steelheaders were not overly successful and entered only 21 fish. Trophy for the largest fish went to steelhead guide Gary Christianson, for his 16-pound, 11-ounce hen from the Campbell.

For all Island hunters and anglers who have "hunted and fished for 30 years and never seen a Game Warden (Conservation Officer)" the following extract is taken from the January-February Fish and Wildlife Branch monthly newsletter:

"Recent studies indicate that resident and non-resident hunters and fishermen spend over 5 million man days per year in pursuit of their sport.

On the other hand, the 73 Conservation Officers in the Fish and Wildlife Branch are only able to spend 4,140 man days in field enforcement, the remainder of their time being spent on pollution investigations, court proceedings, and a myriad of other duties.

This means that for every day a conservation officer spends in the field contacting hunters and fishermen, they (the sportsmen) spend 1,232 man days. Since the average hunter and fisherman spends only about 10 days each year in the field, it appears that it should take about 123 years of hunting and fishing before you should expect to meet a conservation officer."

Opening dates for the 1972 hunting season on Vancouver Island have been released by the fish and wildlife branch. They are: Spring black bear season, April 1 to May 31; bow and arrow only, blacktail deer and black bear, August 26; cougar, April 1: blacktail deer and black bear, September 9.

Fisher Runs Skein to Nine

THUNDER BAY, Ont. (CP) — The Success of Trev Fisher's British Columbia rink in the Canadian mixed curling championships could well depend on the luck of the draw.

Fisher and his Coquitlam foursome are unbeaten after nine rounds of the championship winning their eighth straight game Wednesday, 8-6 over John Clark of Fredericton, N.B.

Today Fisher tackled Al Delmage of Yellowknife, N.W.T., in the 10th round and Al Baldwinson of Winnipeg in the 11th round. The British Columbia rink has a 12th round bye tonight before meeting Tom Stobbs of Springbank, Alta., in the final round Friday morning.

"How important that bye is will depend on whether we beat them in the morning," Delmage said in reference to the British Columbia bye.

"We can beat them, but our only hope is that Alberta does too." Alberta and the Northwest Territories are conceded the best chances of stopping the British Columbia rink.

Alberta, Northwest Territories and Bob Dillon of Charlottetown, P.E.I., all have six wins in eight games, and a chance at the title. Tom Cushing of Toronto is fifth with a 5-3 record, followed by Quebec and Manitoba at 4-3.

Fisher said of his Thursday bye: "It could be just the breather we need before meeting Alberta. We've been lucky with the byes, having our first one Tuesday when there also were three rounds."

THUNDER BAY, Ont. (CP) — Trev Fisher of Coquitlam, B.C., won again this morning and was in a position to wrap up the Canadian mixed curling championship this afternoon with an 11th-round victory over Al Baldwinson of Winnipeg.

Fisher remained unbeaten in nine games with an 11-7 win over Al Delmage of Yellowknife, N.W.T., in the 10th round.

Manitoba Leads

WINNIPEG (CP) — Manitoba defeated Saskatchewan and British Columbia in convincing fashion Wednesday to remain undefeated with six wins through six rounds of the Royal Canadian Legion curling championships.

Mac Scales of Winnipeg defeated Clarence McLean of Port Alberni, 8-4 in a sixth round game. Earlier, he handed Roger Argue of Rouleau, Sask., a 9-4 setback.

In other sixth-round action, Brock Stackhouse of Auclair, Que., defeated Lou Dugre of Chatham, N.B., 13-6, Ronald Brown of Summerside, P.E.I., topped Earl Jesse of Trenton, Ont., 8-4, Frank Hoar of Colchester, N.S., downed John Pike of Grand Falls, Nfld., 7-6 in an extra end, and Howard Wood of Stettler, Alta., defeated Saskatchewan 10-6.

Olson Paces Elks

MEDICINE HAT, Alta. (CP) — The Vern Olson rink from Star City, Sask., clinched first place after five qualifying rounds of the Elks national curling championship Wednesday night.

Olson beat Don Mix of Moncton, 7-5 and had four wins and one loss.

The Manitoba entry, three-time champion Howard Sager of Morden, finished second with three wins and two losses, including a fifth-round 10-5 win over Dave Paterson of Courtenay.

The four bottom rinks — B.C., New Brunswick, Ontario and Alberta — finished in a deadlock with two wins and three defeats each. New Brunswick got the third-place spot on a tournament trustees ruling because they had beaten two of the other three teams twice.

Canucks, Scots Appear Class of World Event

PARTENKIRCHEN (CP) — The world curling championship turned into a two-way battle Wednesday night as Canada and Scotland scored victories to remain undefeated after four rounds in this West German resort town.

And as far as calibre goes in this eight-country, round-robin competition, Canada and Scotland seem head and shoulders above the other six rinks.

Orest Meleschuk made it look easy Wednesday night as he skipped his Winnipeg rink to an 11-5 win over Pierre Boan of France.

Alex Torrance of Scotland had a tougher time with a young Norwegian rink skipped by Knut Bjaanaes, 22, but the precision of the Scots wore down the Norse rink, 6-4.

"There was no pressure on us at all tonight," said the burly Meleschuk, who hardly raised a sweat during his 10-end game. "We got two in the first and never looked back."

Canada and Scotland both have 4-0 marks and it looks like they will coast through the round robin undefeated until they meet in the eighth round Friday night. Top four teams play off for the title in a single knockout Saturday.

Meleschuk's evening game was a far cry from a third-round match against Norway in the afternoon. The Canadians needed two in the final end to edge Bjaanes 8-7.

"Let's not talk about this afternoon," said Meleschuk. "We went sightseeing up the mountain in the morning and we couldn't get our minds on curling during the afternoon. We nearly blew it."

Manfred Raederer of West Germany upset Bob La Bonte of the United States, 9-6, in the fourth round to move into third place with a 3-1 record.

Switzerland and the U.S. are tired for fourth place with 2-2 records. France is 1-3 and Norway and Sweden are 0-4.

GARMISCH-PARTENKIRCHEN (CP) — Orest Meleschuk skipped his Canadian rink to an easy 9-4 victory over Manfred Raederer's West German rink today at the world curling championships and went into first place all alone when Switzerland defeated Scotland 8-7. The Canadians have a 5-0 record.

Stoke Gains Semis On Extra-Time Win

STOKE, England (CP) — Stoke City edged Manchester United 2-1 after 30 minutes of extra time Wednesday night and reached the semi-finals of English Football Association Cup play.

At the end of the regulation 90 minutes the soccer teams were tied 1-1. Terry Smith scored for Stoke and George Best for Manchester in the second half. Jimmy Conroy netted the winner for Stoke in extra time.

The game was a replay of last Saturday's tie. It drew a packed-in crowd of 50,000 with 15,000 more turned away.

Stoke meets Arsenal in the semi-finals. The teams played each other at the same stage of the competition last season. Arsenal won and went on to win the cup.

The other semi-final is between Leeds United, the favorite, and Second-Division Birmingham City.

Other games played Wednesday:

ENGLISH LEAGUE
Division I
Derby 1, Ipswich 1.
Leicester 0, Leeds 0.
Division III
Bolton 0, Walsall 1.
Torquay 2, Halifax 0.
Notts County 1, Rotherham 1.
Division IV

Coleraine Wins

BELFAST (CP) — Coleraine beat Ards 1-0 in an Irish Football Association soccer cup semi-final replay Wednesday. Coleraine meets Portadown in the final.

BOWLER OF WEEK

Quick start was key as Moe Kelly captured women's five-pin award in 22nd week of ninth annual Times Bowler-of-the-Week competition. Starting with 328 game, she followed with efforts of 225 and 271 for 824 series in Monday Classic League at Gibson's Bowladrome to earn award that qualifies her for Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs.

Celtic Reaches Round of Four With Other Previous Winners

Ajax of Holland, Benfica of Portugal, Inter-Milan of Italy and Celtic of Scotland — four previous winners — qualified Wednesday night for Friday's European Soccer Cup semi-final draw in Zurich, Switzerland.

Most impressive of the four semi-finalists was Benfica, which hammered out a 5-1 quarter-final second-leg triumph at home to Feyenoord of Holland, the 1970 European champions. Benfica had been edged 1-0 in the first leg.

Ajax, seeking to retain the cup they won against Panathinaikos of Greece in last year's final, wrapped up a 3-1 aggregate victory with a 1-0 away win to Arsenal, the London-based English champions.

CELTIC HELD TO DRAW

A crowd of 75,000 in Glasgow saw Celtic, the 1967 European champions, draw 1-1 with Ujpest Dozsa of Hungary. The draw enabled Celtic to advance into the semi-finals on an aggregate of 3-2.

Inter-Milan of Italy was defeated 2-1 by Standard Liege of Belgium to draw 2-2 on aggregate but advanced into the semi-finals on away goals.

Inter-Milan saved the night for Italy as two other Italian clubs were swept out of the European Cup Winners Cup and the Union of European Football Association Cup.

England's domination in recent years of the European Fairs Cup, which has been replaced by the UEFA Cup, looked likely to be maintained when Wolverhampton joined Tottenham Hotspur in the UEFA Cup semi-finals.

COMPLETE TRIUMPH

Wolves completed a 3-2 aggregate triumph with a 2-1 second-leg win at home to a depleted Juventus. The Italians were without five of their star players and were unable to build on their 1-1 first-leg draw.

But Italy will still be represented in Friday's UEFA cup semi-final draw in Zurich by AC Milan, with Ferencvaros of Hungary completing the final four.

Another Italian club, Torino, went down 2-1 on aggregate in their European Cup Winners' Cup quarter-final against Glasgow Rangers.

Rangers celebrated their 80th match in European competition with a 1-0 home-leg win.

East and West Europe will be equally represented in Friday's Cup Winners' Cup semi-final draw, with Bayern Munich of West Germany joining Rangers and East European clubs Moscow Dynamo and Dynamo of East Berlin in the last four.

HITLER PLAYS TO LAUGHS

VIENNA (UPI) — Adolf Hitler is the laughing stock of the Viennale Film Festival, organizers said Wednesday.

The Austrian-born dictator is being greeted with hoots of laughter every time he appears on the screen at Vienna's first post-war revival of Nazi propaganda films.

"We had never dreamed of such an effect," said Peter Konlechner, 34, chief organizer of the annual Viennale's movie museum. "We were slightly worried how these old Nazi films would be received, but there has been only one common reaction to Hitler's screen appearance — laughter."

The two-week program of Nazi propaganda and Allied counter-propaganda movies chronicling Hitler's rise and fall is playing to packed houses.

"It's the biggest hit in the Viennale's 10-year history," Konlechner said.

"Most of our audience are young people who never saw Hitler alive," Konlechner said. "They are eager to learn about the man their parents adored during the pre-war period. The common reaction is a widespread disappointment."

Konlechner emphasized, however, that the crowd also ridicules Allies counter-propaganda films when overdone.

"They are not one-sided and have definitely learned their lesson from the past," he said. "They would never fall again for a big liar."

Woodcock Holds the Key

WASHINGTON (WPI) — Nixon administration officials are ready to continue the phase II controls program with an all-public pay board, if that proves necessary, it was learned Wednesday night.

Policy-makers, although taken by surprise by the walkout of three AFL-CIO members from the 15-man tripartite board noted that the union statement carefully skirted any open defiance of a future public board.

"If the wage stabilization program is to be government-controlled, let it be so, openly and clearly . . . without the facade of labor representation and the pretense of tripartitism," the AFL-CIO statement said.

That was taken as a go-ahead from President George Meany for a controls program, with no open or even veiled threat that AFL-CIO unions would strike against government pay orders.

"They're saying," one observer suggested, "that Nixon can run the show while they sit on the sidelines and take potshots at him."

A pay board source said that it intends to conduct "business as usual" today, although another official suggested that the cost of living council might suggest a postponement of the session pending word on whether Leonard Woodcock, head of the United Auto Workers, will stay on the board.

Sources in and out of the administration Wednesday night agreed that the key to immediate events will be whether Woodcock continues on the board, along with Frank F. Fitzsimmons of the Teamsters.

If Woodcock stays on, the administration has several options. It could maintain the tripartite status by going to a bloc system of voting, with the two labor men equal to the 5 public and five business members; it could pare the board down from 15 to 6, with equal membership among the three camps; or try to fill in the posts vacated by the AFL-CIO with "independent" labor representatives.

Either of the first two options would probably be easier for Woodcock and Fitzsimmons to live with.

But a knowledgeable source Wednesday night said that he felt "Woodcock will have to walk (out)" even though he might be reluctant to do so. That would make an all-public board the most probably course of action.

MILLION JOBLESS IN BRITAIN

LONDON (AP) — The number of unemployed in Britain in March topped one million for the third straight month with no sign the worst labor crisis since the Second World War is easing, official figures showed today.

The employment ministry said 1,014,511 persons were out of work this month.

The high figures are certain to bring the Conservative government of Prime Minister Edward Heath under renewed fire by trade unions and left-wing elements.

The only encouraging signs are a sharp increase in the number of job vacancies—up 13,191 this month to 157,636—and a drop in the number of layoffs —18,000 in February compared with 23,000 the month before.

Muskie Finds Key Hussein Denies Deal

CHICAGO (WP) — Illinois has given Sen. Edmund Muskie the biggest victory of his presidential campaign, and with it, many of his advisers believe, the key to the strategy that may enable him to wrest the Democratic nomination fron Sen. Hubert Humphrey.

Virtually complete returns from the slow count of delegate contests in Tuesday's voting showed Wednesday that Muskie had beaten Sen. George McGovern by a 4-to-1 margin in their head-to-head contest for convention votes.

That victory, along with Muskie's 5-to-3 win over ex-Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy in the separate non-binding presidential preference poll, continued a pattern of victories for the Maine senator over various liberal challengers in all the early presidential primaries.

Muskie advisers said Wednesday that the way is now open, beginning in April 4 Wisconsin primary, for Muskie to consolidate liberal support for an eventual showdown with Humphrey, the man they expect to emerge as the favorite of "old guard" Democratic elements.

Outdoor Schooling Limps After Referendum Defeat

By HUMPHRY DAVY
Times Staff

The defeat of the recent school operating referendum has reduced chances that Greater Victoria school district can adopt a highly successful pilot project—outdoor education, Dr. Harold Knight, a school trustee, said Wednesday.

"But it's too important a program to scrap," he said. "We will keep the project going on a limited basis. The board has set aside the modest sum of $1,500 for outdoor education for the whole district — a ridiculous small sum."

Knight said the provincial government should provide funds to enable school boards to incorporate the program in school curriculums.

"This is a most important area of education," he said. "I can't over-emphasize it. But it requires some input from the government. At present we are carrying on the program on a piecemeal basis."

Outdoor education is a program enabling students to spend a week outdoors where they are taught their skills through recreational activities — in a practical and visual way.

AWARENESS

It also attempts to develop environmental awareness through studies in conservation, ecology and natural resources and gives pupils an opportunity to learn new recreational skills.

Pupils in Grades 6 and 7 at Margaret Jenkins Elementary last spring took part in a pilot project at Thunderbird camp at Sooke. It proved an outstanding success and students this year are raising funds to take another outdoor course.

The outdoor recreation course was started in 1960 by the North Vancouver school board and it has since spread to other areas of the province.

In Ontario, outdoor education is part of the school curriculum.

Hugh Murray, a Victoria teacher involved in the North Vancouver Outdoor education program, said the program has worked miracles with students.

Students who found arithmetic and biology dull, suddenly took an interest in the subjects.

"Students were able to realize the value of the various subjects," he explained. "Education became meaningful.

Murray said the outdoor recreation activities, such as canoeing, hiking, archery, bird and animals studies, also provided students with new spare time activities.

Knight said the basic problem facing the outdoor course is that the department of education doesn't recognize it — despite studies in the United States and Canada showing it is one of the best educational programs in years.

"Outdoor education is wholly a local responsibility," he said. "It is still not possible for school districts to acquire land or erect buildings outside their district for such a program.

Rent Hike Sought

A higher price for rental of the McPherson restaurant is being sought by Victoria city hall.

The McPherson Seafood and Steakhouse, owned by the city, has been operated by restaurateur Cliff Clarke, whose lease expired about one year ago.

The rental has been about $7,000 a year, according to Clarke, who wants the city to renovate some of the restaurant's facilities.

Ald. Ove Witt said the city is looking for a "better deal" than that offered by Clarke for a renewed lease.

A point of argument has arisen over Clarke's use of the restaurant equipment for his catering service. Clarke says the catering has been practised since he first operated the restaurant.

All other exposures are automatically controlled by an electric eye and electronic shutter.

There are optional accessories (for the 440 and 450) that let you take close-ups, portraits, even self-portraits.

Just don't wait until the last minute.

After Easter, when you ask for two packs of color film, you have to pay for them.

CHAMBER SINGERS CONTRAST COMPOSERS

By BRUCE QBEE
Times Correspondent

The hallways of the department of music at the University of Victoria were crowded Wednesday with student musicians eager to meet the members of the University of California at Santa Barbara Chamber Singers.

The group gave a special noon-hour concert in the University's MacLaurin Auditorium.

The concert was divided into four sections featuring six different composers. Prior to the beginning of each section Dorothy Westra, director of the 18-member choir, explained the circumstances surrounding the composition of each piece.

The first section consisted of six selections by 15th century composer, Josquin des Prez. As the text of each song was sung in French, the choir had to rely solely upon its musical ability to maintain the interest of the audience. Some of the pieces used a drum and finger-cymbals to emphasize the rhythm. The second section, entitled "Five Centuries of Spring," consisted of five poems from the 15th to the 20th centuries.

Each poem, set to music by contemporary composer Kirk Machem, compared and contrasted the moods of each century. The section began with a light-hearted 15th century poem using imitative bird-calls to create a "spring-like" feeling and ended with a depressing 20th century anti-war poem using the same imitative bird-calls with a touch of disgust and bitterness.

The last two sections of the performance, 'Two Bird Songs' and 'Four Chorales for Summer,' were exactly what the titles imply; light, rhythmic pieces portraying the sensations brought by summer and the elements of nature.

The success of the concert cannot be attributed entirely to the choir's musical ability. The selection of material was well-oriented to the time of year and type of audience.

The UCSB Chamber Singers have toured the Orient, Europe and Britain in previous years and are doing a two-week Canadian tour. Wednesday's concert was the third in a series of nine. From Victoria they will go to the mainland, through Washington and Oregon and then home to Santa Barbara.

Home Loan Rates May Edge Upwards

A trend to lower mortgage lending rates that has lasted more than a year appears to have bottomed out as interest edges upward in several sectors.

The March report of Mortgage Insurance Co. of Canada shows conventional house loans in a prevailing range of 8¾ to 9 per cent, representing a rise of ¼ per cent for some companies.

The president of Mortgage Brokers Association of B.C., Ian Dennis, reports indications are present for higher rates, confirming the movement by some lenders to 9 per cent prime rate.

Supply of mortgage funds for homeowners, builders and rental projects is good in virtually all of the 32 reporting areas across the country, although builders' speculative funds were short in Victoria.

Homeowner loans in the early part of March were in good to plentiful supply in all areas surveyed.

Interest rates for conventional house loans ranged from 8⅝ to 9⅛ per cent, and for rental projects from 9 to 10 per cent, most commonly between 9 and 9½ per cent.

MPs Seek to Unravel Red Tape

OTTAWA (CP) — The wilderness of government regulations is about to be explored by a new Senate-Commons committee intended to defend the individual against unfair and illegal bureaucratic practices.

The government named the 12 MPs Wednesday who will join eight senators appointed earlier on the statutory instruments committee.

Statutory instruments are regulations with the force of law imposed by the cabinet, public servants and the many government boards, commissions and other agencies. Often, the regulations give detailed methods of enforcing general laws passed publicly by Parliament.

The committee's job is to scrutinize all regulations to ensure both that they comform to laws passed by Parliament and that they do not trespass unduly on personal freedoms.

Legislation passed last year to establish the permanent committee also requires the government to publish in the weekly Canada Gazette all regulations other than those involving federal-provincial relations, international relations or national security.

The committee is seen by supporters as an important step in limiting the wide powers granted by Parliament to the cabinet and the public service to implement laws that Parliament often merely sketches in outline.

Former justice minister John Turner called the committee and its powers a major legal reform, and "a significant step toward a more open society."

Robert McCleave (PC—Halifax-East Hants), named to the committee, said Wednesday he hopes it will have the punch of the auditor-general, the man who scrutinizes government spending and reports on it to Parliament.

'Daily Life' Law Studied

OTTAWA (CP) — The laws affecting the daily lives of Canadians are going to get a thorough examination by the agency established last year to keep federal laws under permanent review.

The Law Reform Commission of Canada announced Wednesday that its initial investigation will be into such areas as criminal law, family law, the laws governing evidence, sentencing and general criminal procedures.

The six-member commission, headed by Mr. Justice E. Patrick Hartt of the Ontario Supreme Court, revealed its first research program Wednesday after consultations with the public about the laws that should be studied first.

"The responses to our memorandum confirmed our belief that we should focus initially on areas of law that affect the daily lives of Canadians," said the first report from the commission.

QUESTION MANY LAWS

And it goes on to ask questions about the areas that will be studied.

"Should a witness be able to tell his story unhindered by legal objections? . . . Should a man be entitled to take his own life? . . . Should euthanasia be a crime in all circumstances? . . . Should theatres be permitted to show pornographic movies? . . . Should an offence committed under the influence of alcohol or drugs be excused? . . . Does it cost too much to obtain a divorce? . . . Can a jury composed of middle-class people fairly assess the guilt or innocence of an underprivileged person?"

These and many other questions will be tackled by the commission, which expects to operate with a 24-person research staff on an initial annual budget of $997,000.

The first study papers by the commission, which will travel across Canada, will be circulated within a few months, he said.

Pipeline Damage Compared

WASHINGTON (AP) — Interior Undersecretary William Pecora says an Alaska oil pipeline would be a greater spill risk than one through Canada, but the trans-Canada route would cause more damage because three times the distance, in Canada, is in permafrost.

The department's environmental-impact statements says the permafrost distance of a Canadian route is 1½ to two times that of the proposed Alaska route. And it rates the land disruption about equal in severity either way.

Pecora also said, in a prepared statement issued by the department, that a Canadian pipeline route would require extensions east and west to the U.S. Midwest and West Coast, and "inevitably, much actual disruption of the environment would result."

But he conceded in an interview that the extensions actually would have a small impact since they could share rights-of-way already carrying oil pipelines from Canada.

His statement made no mention of the unavoidable impacts on Alaska's Prince William Sound or other segments of the tanker route that would be needed to haul oil from the proposed pipeline's southern end at Valdez to ports on the U.S. West Coast.

Explaining this omission in the interview, Pecora said: "It has not been shown that chronic minor spillage (of oil) does any actual damage."

Interior's nine-volume environmental impact statement, issued Monday, says there would be chronic spillage resulting in "a gradual build-up and accumulation of pollutant hydrocarbons" in the water.

The spilled oil "could . . . possibly affect areas far distant from the original discharge site," it says.

The impact statement says oil pollution could cost salmon fishermen in the Valdez area up to $400,000 a year—though probably less—and it would harm the local herring fishery.

Shellfishing "would be restricted and perhaps lost entirely for unknown lengths of time," and "it is likely that the commercial and recreational harvest of Dungeness crabs in Port Valdez would be lost as a result of normal terminal operations."

'You'll Regret Drilling'

MONTREAL (CP) — Ralph Nader said Wednesday the Canadian government will "deeply regret" a decision to allow offshore drilling by a Texas oil firm on the east coast of New Brunswick.

"The government will regret it for two reasons," the Washington-based consumer advocate told the Brotherhood of the Temple Emanu-El.

"The first is the more obvious danger of oil spills. We now know that oil decomposes in water to form carcinogens and other dangerous substances.

"The second is the more subtle danger of the pressure this will bring on governments in the U.S. to allow drilling in such areas as the Hudson channel."

Mr. Nader also criticized the province of Quebec whose attitude "seems to be that if the province can lure investment here by being a pollution haven, then it is worth the risk to get the jobs."

"This is short-sighted in the extreme. If this sort of philosophy dominates, then companies will continue to go into poorer areas and destroy the environment."

COULD BE LAX

A situation could arise where underprivileged or economically-depressed areas competed for industry by being lax on polluters, he said.

After establishing that General Motors Corp. had a profit of $1.9 billion, larger than the revenues of most countries in the world, Mr. Nader said corporation executives should be held responsible for their acts and not hide behind corporate anonymity.

"More than nine times the number of people are killed on the highways than are killed in street crimes."

He also said that more than 90 per cent of water purification plants in the United States and presumably in Canada left all forms of virus and such contaminates as mercury and lead in drinking water.

Public health and the dangers posed by polluters will be one of the leading political items in the latter part of the decade, he said.

'ANGER . . . SUSPICION' REPLACES SPIRIT OF '67

EDMONTON (CP) — A spirit of anger and suspicion has replaced the "euphoric spirit" of centennial year, Opposition Leader Robert Stanfield said Wednesday night.

"There is uncertainty as to our goals; there is uncertainty as to the methods of achieving whatever goals we decide on; and there is even uncertainty as to the strength of the fabric that is binding our country together," he told a $100-a-plate Progressive Conservative dinner.

There is "a high degree of suspicion among farmers and ranchers" and suspicion in Alberta that the province's interests in natural resources may be sold out.

"What I am saying is that there must be a real participation on the part of the province in any and all decisions that are made or negotiations that affect it in the field of energy. And, that is a commitment that I would give you now if I become prime minister of Canada."

Mr. Stanfield said Canada must emphasize Canadian participation in its own economy rather than holding back foreign investment; and Canada had to be sure that any steps it took would strengthen Canada and not compromise unity by hurting regional interests.

The Conservative leader pledged not to let Prime Minister Trudeau "off the hook of his own past performance."

"No matter what he does, I am going to make it my business to remind the Canadian people about his failures. Failures in the management of the Canadian economy; failures in the field of national unity; and above all failure in leadership —his failure to give even a hint of the direction he sees this country proceeding in. . . ."

Mr. Stanfield said he will attack the Liberal government for "its cynical attempt to trade off unemployment against inflation in a public relations fight that ended up giving us the worst of both worlds."

"Just as the boy is father of the man, so the past record of a government is a clear indication of its future competence."

Mr. Stanfield said his main attack on the Liberal government would be its "lack of frankness in its dealings with the Canadian people," and his promise to the people will be the restoration of confidence.

Policies had to be adopted that would appeal to the initiative of Canadian businessmen to encourage employment and strengthen Canada's position in world markets.

A Progressive Conservative government would fight inflation but not at the expense of jobs, adjust old-age pensions to compensate for rises in the cost of living and trim the fat from government spending, he said.

Earlier, Mr. Stanfield, on a three-day tour of Western Canada, told a news conference Canada should try to persuade the United States to postpone a decision on a trans-Alaska pipeline.

Opposition Fires All Guns Against Anti-Bullet 'Law'

By DAN TURNER

OTTAWA (CP) — Opposition MPs came on Wednesday as guardians of civil rights — especially the freedom to use guns — in charging the government with trying to give itself too much power to restrict access to explosives.

Despite denials by Energy Minister Donald Macdonald, several MPs said they were suspicious the minister might use proposed amendments to the Explosives Act to keep hunters from buying ammunition.

There also were complaints that the legislation, debated at the second-reading stage preceding detailed committee consideration, would make it unnecessarily difficult for companies and farmers to buy explosives legitimately.

Mr. Macdonald denied the access-to-ammunition charge, saying that the bill gives him no power he doesn't already have under existing law. He said the government is interested in tightening regulations on large-scale explosives, not consumer-type explosives such as ammunition.

TAX BILL APPROVED

In other Commons business, the House gave third and final reading to a bill to continue a three-per-cent tax cut for individuals and a seven-per-cent cut for corporations through 1972. It was announced last October.

Today, the Commons debates a Conservative motion criticizing old-age pension programs.

In Wednesday's debate, Mr. Macdonald said his bill will "tighten up the policing and control of industrial explosives . . . ," and permit tougher police scrutiny of manufacture, storage, sale and possession of such explosives.

Before the opposition opened up, he said he didn't think members would require any conviction about the desirability of increasing the explosives controls that now exist.

Arnold Peters (NDP Timiskaming) argued that ammunition should not be included on the list of explosives on which the minister could restrict.

The Canadian public is not in favor of total restriction of firearms, he said.

"I am not going to participate in accomplishing the same thing through the back door by including in this act safety cartridges, ammunition for guns and shotgun shells.

"It is quite true that under one act a person may have a gun but under another act he is not permitted to have ammunition for that gun."

Mr. Peters warned the minister that the people of Northern Ontario would get their ammunition, even if he restricted its availability.

"I do not give a damn what he does about ammunition in Northern Ontario.

"If we do not get it anyplace else, we will get it from United States tourists, just as we get fishing tackle."

Jack Horner (PC—Crowfoot) said the legislation "touches upon the very freedoms of the individual which all of us cherish so much."

It would not prevent uprisings similar to the 1970 Quebec crisis because future revolutions would be better planned, he said. Arms and ammunition could be acquired from other countries.

Clifford Downey (PC—Battle River) noted it is illegal in Ireland to possess guns and explosives. "What has this done in regard to peace?" he asked. "Absolutely nothing."

Lawns should be enjoyed not worked on.

A 22 lb. bag of Lawn Green covers 5,000 sq. ft. of lawn. This is far more than any ordinary, heavy-weight fertilizer can cover. (One of the reasons is that in the heavy-weights, the carrier is a heavy dense material, like sand. In light-weight Lawn Green the carrier is vermiculite, which weighs only a couple of pounds a bushel).

The 20-10-5 formula means it's a complete balanced plant food.

And the long-lasting, Ureaform slow-release Nitrogen means that it continues to feed your lawn long after application.

So you don't have to use it very often, which is a big improvement over some fertilizers.

Students 'Get Away With' Things Others Can't Do

EDMONTON (CP) — Student activism and rebellion was described Wednesday by American sociologist Seymour Lipset as a luxury few other segments of society can afford.

"Society allows students to get away with all kinds of things it won't allow others to do," said Dr. Lipset of Harvard University's Centre for International Affairs at Cambridge, Mass.

He told an audience at the University of Alberta the "establishment" in Britain "is a lot tougher on youth and students."

North American students can postpone jobs and interrupt studies to become political activists but "if older people tried to do it they'd just lose a lot of money."

He was delivering a public lecture on students as a political force.

Floods Threaten

WINNIPEG (CP) — Based on average temperatures and precipitation during the remainder of the spring runoff period, flooding of valley lands is expected on the Souris River from the Manitoba-North Dakota border north about 400 miles to Hartney.

In making the announcement in the legislature Wednesday, acting mines and resources minister Leonard Evans said runoff in the Saskatchewan and North Dakota portions of the Souris basin is well advanced, but significant snow cover remains in the Moose and Turtle Mountain areas of western Manitoba.

Slower Pace Urged

EDMONTON (CP) — Dave Russell, Alberta's minister of municipal affairs, warned the federal government Wednesday to go slow in the area of municipal activities.

In a budget debate speech in the legislature, Russell said the federal ministry of state has indicated "by certain actions and certain exploratory activities that they are perhaps interested in involving themselves, on a cost-sharing basis, in certain kinds of municipal activities in Alberta."

Move Delayed

EDMONTON (CP) — The transfer of elk to the Clear Hills area of Northern Alberta has been suspended until fall — because many of the animals are pregnant.

A total of 46 elk have already been moved from Elk Island National Park, 30 miles east of Edmonton, to their new home, 400 miles to the north. Keith Moran of Fairview, Alta., chairman of Zone 6 of the Alberta Fish and Game Association, said it had been expected that additional shipments from Elk Island and Jasper National Park will bring the total of transferred elk to between 135 and 150.

Compensation Hiked

EDMONTON (CP) — The widow of a murder victim has been awarded $393 a month for one year, the Alberta Crimes Compensation Board said.

Lynn Charlotte Hydamacka, 25, previously had been receiving $300 monthly after the original hearing of the board a year ago after her husband, Russel Hydamacka, 30, was shot to death at his home in 1970. His assailant was sentenced to 12 years for manslaughter.

Bribe Alleged

NORTH BATTLEFORD, Sask. (CP) — A woman testified Tuesday that Vernon Rumpht said he would give her $1 if she voted Liberal in last June's provincial election.

Georgina Alexander told district court that she was surprised when she received her payment. She was testifying in the trial of Rumpht who is facing three charges of bribery in connection with the election in Meadow Lake constituency.

'Can't Have Both'

VANCOUVER (CP) — A report prepared by a San Francisco consulting firm says Vancouver probably can't afford rapid transit if a third crossing is built because cars would take passengers away from rapid transit in large numbers.

The $20,000 report was commissioned by the Greater Vancouver regional transportation committee. It will be presented at a meeting of the regional board next.

The heard of the transportation committee, Allan Kelly, said the consultants apparently are saying the people of Vancouver can do anything they like, if they can afford it. But there would be no economic justification to try to build both a third crossing and rapid transit at the same time, he said.

Kelly added that although the report doesn't say it, it would cost less money for rapid transit.

b.c. briefs

Freighter Fined

VANCOUVER (CP) — The German freighter Aegis Faith was fined $750 for polluting Vancouver harbor. The vessel was charged Feb. 16 with violating the Canada Shipping Act after it discharged 100 gallons of oil into the harbor while loading grain.

More Policemen

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Vancouver police force is going to ask the city for another 25 men. The increase would clear the way to put more men on beat duty in a community relations program in progress, said acting deputy chief constable Tom Dixon.

'Dangerous' Move

VANCOUVER (CP) — Calgary Mayor Rod Sykes said it is "dangerous and destructive" to avoid providing decent housing for everyone.

Speaking to the annual meeting of The Elector's Action Movement, Sykes said that housing for poor people is one of the most pressing and costly problems facing governments.

He said the challenge to government is to provide low income housing. He added that society cannot afford not to provide it.

Protest Ad

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — The trustees of the Prince George School district have decided to protest formally a B.C. government newspaper advertisement that dealt with the dispute over legislation to limit school teachers' salary increases to 6.5 per cent annually. The trustees called the advertisement, which appeared in B.C. newspapers misleading and false. They suggested the province could better spend tax dollars by improving education.

Depot Destroyed

FORT NELSON (CP) — Damage is estimated at almost $100,000 in a fire Wednesday night that destroyed a truck repair depot on the Alaska Highway five miles north of here.

Search Held Up

MICHEL (CP)—The threat of another slide Wednesday forced a halt to the search for the bodies of two men believed buried under tons of mud near this southern British Columbia town.

The search was not expected to resume until tonight at the earliest, RCMP said.

The body of one man, Luigi Marra, 40, was found lodged in the CP rail tracks near where he was sitting when the slide fell Monday from a 1,000-foot cliff.

Student Guilty

VANCOUVER (CP) — Neil Cowan, 19, a University of British Columbia student, was remanded to April 5 for sentencing when he pleaded guilty Wednesday to a charge of attempted extortion. He admitted sending a letter to Vancouver businessman Alan Eyre, threatening to blow up his car, burn his home or shoot a member of his family if he did not give him $10,000.

Safest Mine

VANCOUVER (CP) — Texada Mines Ltd. has been awarded this year's Ryan trophy as the safest metal mine. The company had only six lost-time injuries in a three-year period.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

Lynda Podfigorny, 19, of 1605 Rebecca, who earlier had pleaded guilty to a forgery charge and 13 counts of uttering, was jailed for four months and placed on probation for two years in provincial court Wednesday.

Bad cheques in the charges against her totalled $3,037.25. Court had been told the money was used to support her heroin habit.

"I feel profoundly sorry for you," Judge William Ostler said in passing sentence. The offences occurred between August and November of last year in Victoria, Saanich, Esquimalt and Oak Bay as well as one charge laid by the RCMP.

Ostler said he would recommend Richard Service, 22, of no fixed address, serve his six-month term at a forestry camp.

Service appeared for sentence on one charge of false pretences over $50 and four counts of false pretences under $50 as well as a charge of obtaining lodging by fraud and transportation by false pretences, all in Victoria, together with six counts of false pretences under $50 originating in Vancouver.

Perry Bernard Ethier, 21, of Sidney, was sentenced to a nominal one day in jail and fined $2,000 for being in possession of a restricted drug, MDA, for the purpose of trafficking.

Defence counsel Dermod Owen-Flood referred to a Nanaimo court decision earlier this month in which a drug trafficker with a criminal record was fined $5,000 rather than getting a jail term.

Owen-Flood argued that in exceptional cases a severe penalty short of imprisonment should be considered.

In the light of appeal court decisions, Ostler said the Nanaimo case left him concerned about consistency in sentencing. But he agreed Ethier, who has no criminal record, was a case where an exception to the usual prison terms could be made.

Dirk Jory, 17, of 1534 West Burnside, was given a suspended sentence and placed on probation for 18 months after pleading guilty to being in possession of stolen tools worth more than $50.

He had been given a similar sentence Tuesday for attempted theft, a Saanich charge which arose from an unsuccessful effort to get gasoline from a Burnside business March 2.

In traffic court, Leonard Jack Kelly, 30, of 94 Marler, was sentenced to three months in jail and banned from driving for one year when he appeared before Judge E. F. N. Robinson.

Robert Charles Jackson, 33, of 1417 Harrison, was jailed 14 days and prohibited from driving six months for impaired driving. He was stopped for speeding Nov. 28 on Fort.

Decade's Post Loss $589M

By PAUL JACKSON
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — The Canadian post office department has chalked up a deficit of $589,655,000 in mail handling operations over the past 10 years.

Figures released here Wednesday show that the last time it made money in any phase of its mail handling operations was in 1967-68 when first class mail deliveries brought in $1,575,000.

Combined losses for all four types of mail delivery over the past 10 years have ranged from a low of $10,878,000 in 1964-65 to a high of $100,592,000 in 1970-71.

The expected deficit for the current fiscal year 1971-72 takes a dip over the previous year to $95,615,000.

However a post office department spokesman said Postmaster General Jean Pierre Cote hasn't given up the idea of the post office turning a profit some time in the future.

He said surpluses could have been made in certain years except for heavy expenditures on expanding post office facilities to give Canadians better service.

How to Buzz Bomb Calls

Phone Gadget Could Crack That Young Voice of Doom (Is It a Boy or a Girl?) Which Has Unnerved a School

B.C. Tel is installing a device on school phones enabling the tracing of incoming calls.

It works like this: an anonymous caller warns of a bomb and then hangs up. But the device prevents the connection from being broken as long as the phone is not hung up at the school. Then the school official simply calls the telephone operator who traces the call, according to school board officials.

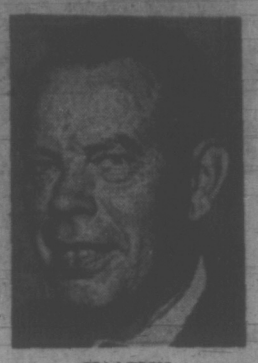
And presto, the caller's anonymity is exploded, so to speak.

A voice that sounds like "either a boy or a girl" has created three major disruptions at Cedar Hill Junior Secondary since Friday by uttering bomb scares over the phone.

"Even the staff is getting upset — apart from the nuisance" of evacuating the school and disrupting classes, Principal Les Isaacson said today.

He said that he had to circulate a letter to all the parents of the school's 700 students to explain that the calls have been a hoax after rumors were running around that "something" had been found in the school.

Cedar Hill hasn't been the only school bothered by bomb scares. In the last two weeks, Camosun College has received two, and on Wednesday morning an elementary school in Saanich was evacuated, according to Saanich Police Inspector J. M. Post.



ISAACSON

At Cedar Hill, Friday's bomb threat at 2:35 p.m. had students out for 40 minutes while police, firemen and teachers searched the school. On Monday, a 8:35 a.m. call had the school out for 35 minutes, and on Wednesday at 12:30 p.m. threat forced closure for the rest of the day.

Isaacson said that the voice was believed to be a boy's in the first two calls, then it sounded like a girl's in the last call. "It's one of those voices that could be either a boy or girl."

He added it was young enough to be a student's.

Police, together with B.C. Tel, have made "arrangements" designed to catch the caller next time he or she calls, Isaacson said.

In his letter to parents, the principal explained that students had to be sent home twice in whatever clothes they happened to be wearing at the time of the scare.

Only with the full permission of parents would students be let back into the school during the searches to retrieve their belongings, he said.

"We ask you to bear with us at this time and accept the fact that ignoring such a call might place your children in potential danger even though it can be considered that the call is a hoax."

Isaacson said today that the threats have not resulted in abnormal absenteeism.

Victoria Fraud Squad Set Loose to Draw Up Dossier On High-Pressure Activities of 'Dare to Be Great'

Peterson Plans Hard Look At Pyramid Selling Deals

By ROBERT OLVER and WALTER McKINNON, Times Staff

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson promised Wednesday to crack down on pyramid selling schemes in British Columbia if they are being carried on as a result of loopholes in the Criminal Code of Canada.

Peterson's pledge came following a statement from Victoria city Police Chief Jack Gegory that his department's fraud squad is preparing a brief for submission to the attorney-general on the activities of Dare To Be Great of Canada (1971) Ltd., a company allegedly carrying on a pyramid-selling operation in Victoria at present.

Peterson said if cases now being tried under the Criminal Code of Canada do not result in convictions he will consider tightening provisions of the provincial securities act.

CHARGED

Dare To Be Great and another firm owned by the same principals and operated on a similar basis, Koscot Interplanetary Ltd., have been charged under the federal criminal code (Section 189 (1) E) in Montreal, Edmonton, Calgary and North Vancouver.

Both firms are controlled by Glenn Turner, a South Carolina entrepeneur labeled by Life Magazine in May, 1971, as a "high-pressure" salesman.

"Pyramid sales schemes are not the type of promotion to be in any way encouraged," Peterson said.

He contended that pyramid selling schemes were a danger because "they often take worthwhile business propositions and corrupt them so that they enrich the promoters, running out of steam before they make any return to the average investor."

MULTI-LEVEL

Turner, who, according to Life Magazine, today sits at the top of a financial empire worth hundreds of millions of dollars, founded his fortune on the basis of multi-level or pyramid selling.

In 1967 he borrowed $5,000 to start a cosmetics company, Koscot Interplanetary. He was a rich man, however, long before any cosmetics were sold.

For example, a man who purchased a Koscot distributorship for $5,000 was allowed to sign up sub-distributors at $2,000 each and he received a commission of $700 for each of these.

MINOR PART

Cosmetics, according to Life Magazine, were a very minor part of the operation — distributors were making money just selling sub-distributorships.

Peterson said Wednesday the government has repeatedly warned would-be investors against pyramid schemes and added: "We would again advise anyone to seek competent advice before putting their money in any such plan."

Chief Gregory said "We have been watching this operation and . . . as a matter of policy we are preparing a brief on what we know of their operations for the attorney-general."

PREMIER CONCERNED

Last week Premier Bennett also told the Times that he was concerned about pyramid selling schemes and hinted that B.C. would take steps to tighten existing provincial legislation "if that appears to be necessary."

Victoria city Det.-Sgt. Tom Smith, who is in charge of preparing the brief on Dare To Be Great for Peterson's department, says he expects to have it ready in "about a week."

Inspector R. S. Wood of the Victoria Royal Canadian Mounted Police 'E' Division says the force is "aware of the existence of this organization in Canada" and if it sees a possibility of legal action against the firm "we would naturally refer it to the attorney-general."

Dare To Be Great (which markets a four-stage self-improvement package at prices up to $5,000) and its parent firm, Koscot, have been restricted or banned in a number of U.S. states. The most recent ban, in Oregon last week, restricted Dare To Be Great to marketing only the two lowest levels of its program — to a maximum of $2,000.

In Canada, until at least one of the trials now in progress is concluded, both firms are free to continue operations.

GREGORY

'CROWS THAT PREY ON HUMAN VICTIMS'

A 21-year-old man who told court he realized "prison is the only way I'm finally going to get off heroin" was sentenced today to six months definite and six months indeterminate for cashing forged cheques.

Alexander David Hogg, of 1315 Roy, pleaded guilty to uttering a $25 cheque he knew to be forged Monday, and trying to cash a cheque for $40 at The Bay Wednesday.

Hogg had received a two-year probation term only last week on eight counts of uttering. He also was charged today with breach of that probation.

Judge William Ostler told the accused the combination of offences usually warranted a longer jail term, but said he was "encouraged" by Hogg's realization that "heroin and crime are inseparable."

The judge ripped heroin dealers, "carrion crows that prey upon their human victims just as their black counterparts do in nature. They hang around waiting for their victims to go out and steal to get money."

Hogg was ordered to the Lower Mainland Regional Correctional Centre, with a recommendation from Ostler that the six-month definite term be served in a forestry camp.

UVic English Head Plans to Step Down

Dr. Roy Leslie, 49, head of the University of Victoria's largest department—English—will step down at the end of the next academic year.

Leslie said he notified the administration of his intentions last fall so that it would have a lot of time to find a successor if it decided to look outside the faculty of 54 members.

Leslie is the fifth top administrator to announce his resignation this year. The others have been president Bruce Partridge, vice-president Jack Kyle, fine arts dean Peter Garvie and arts and science dean John Climenhaga.

MAIN REASON

Leslie said that he will remain on the faculty as one of the three remaining senior professors in English, the other two of which are Robin Skelton and John Peter.

The "overriding reason" for his resignation is his desire to devote his full-time energies to teaching and research in his specialty — medieval literature.

Leslie came to UVic four years ago to head the department from the University of Wisconsin. A Scotsman, he had spend most of his career at the University of Manchester.

'PETERED OUT'

During his administration "we've overbauled every area of study," including introduction of graduate studies for both a MA and a PhD, and two new first-year courses.

He noted that during 1968-69 a structure was created that would allow students to be represented on department committees.

DOCTOR FEARED DROWNED

The canoe was found Wednesday by RCMP searchers, overturned and jammed under logs nine miles upriver from Port Renfrew.

Theatre Site Studied By Holiday Inn Chain

The Holiday Inn chain has reportedly abandoned plans to build a hotel on the Nordal property on Wharf Street in downtown Victoria in favor of a new site at Yates and Blanshard.

If the new plan is carried out, sources say, the hotel would replace the Capitol movie theatre and Ming's Kitchen restaurant.

Inability to reach an agreement on terms of the Nordal deal is apparently the reason for the switch.

The Nordal property lies between Wharf and Government streets along Courtney but is bisected by Langley Street, which would require closing for a hotel development.

One of the adjacent property owners on Langley had been unwilling to give simple consent to the street closing, another possible factor in the switch by Holiday Inn.

The city earlier promised to close and sell Langley if other parties were agreeable.

Park Fund Not for City

The capital regional district park fund was not established to provide municipal parks, a B.C. parks branch official said today.

He was commenting on a suggestion made by Mayor Peter Pollen Wednesday that the city might contribute Thetis Park to the region if the regional board looks after creation of more small parks in the metropolitan area.

The provincial government contributes to the regional park fund.

"The park fund was established to provide parklands in the region for future use," he said. "Already some of the purchased parklands are being widely used, such as Witty's Lagoon and East Sooke Park."

The mayor at a regional board budget debate said one other alternative was for the city to sell the park to a developer for a subdivision.

How Not to Help the Canadian Writer

AT THE RISK OF SEEMing out of step with the new, self-conscious nationalism, I hope that nothing will come of a scheme aired on CBC's 11 p.m. news the other evening. I was dozing when its proponent began his pitch, and didn't catch his name. But his suggestion, which brought me wide awake and growling, was that our book-sellers should be required to allot a quota of their shelf-space to paperbacks turned out by Canadian writers.

Canada's publishers would presumably hasten to fill this space liberated from the American paperback swarm. The Canadian author would benefit from an expanded market, and we would all be that much closer to achieving the Great Whatsis, the National Talisman, the Canadian Identity.

Superficially, it's a neat scheme. If adopted, it would subject the bookseller to the same compulsion visited on our television and radio outlets by the Canadian content rulings. The book trade mightn't be too happy about it, but I doubt that Canadians at large would be moved to protest yet another arm-twisting in an era that sees personal freedoms on the decline.

But this paper tiger does have a few holes in it, and since a federal government given over to the enjoyment of a prolonged silly season might miss them, I would like to point a few of them out.

The book-seller doesn't stand at the end of the literary chain. Beyond him is the reader who, thank God, is still free to decide what he chooses to read. And if a book, whether paperback or hard cover, doesn't offer the entertainment or instruction he demands, his first scrutiny will be his last.

His money stays in his pocket, and the book goes back on the shelf.

Another point. The Canadian writer with something to impart and the ability to put it on paper isn't condemned to a state of unpublished frustration. Our woods aren't full of mute, inglorious Miltons denied the literary renown they deserve.

That face-saving illusion is cuddled by many a would-be writer whose work has failed to find publication. It has, in fact, established itself as one of the legends-without-substance that cluster around the writers' craft.

The facts, however, don't support it.

At a generous estimate, about 90 per cent of the manuscripts that turn up in Canadian — or American — publisher's offices have nothing going for them except the earnest hopes of those who submitted them.

If the remaining 10 per cent yields publishable material, the editor will be properly grateful.

It's a red-letter day when he bags a winner — and from my own experience on both sides of an editorial desk, I can testify that it doesn't come very often.

Not often enough, I suggest, to make any enforced Canadian-content proposal worth the powder to blow it.

I'm not knocking the Canadian writer as such. For a country of 21 million, we're producing as many authentic authors as can be expected. I don't doubt, either, that their number if not their ratio of incidence, will increase with our population.

Government can't do anything to change that. Three men with a new song's measure may tumble a kingdom down, but a government can't make gifted writers of songs or anything else. All it's likely to produce in its attempts too lay on culture with a scoop-shovel is another boondoggle to be paid for out of the taxpayers' pockets.

Some of the Canadians and sojourners in Canada whose writings have earned space in the book stores made the break-through into print in Canada. Others took the long way around. Their work first won acceptance in the United States or in England.

It is significant to note, though, that they have one thing in common. Nobody attempted to force a readership for them. They hitched talent to perseverance and stamina, and did the thing on their own.

That's why I growl when someone who fails to realize that we're shaping our Canadian identities at our own pace and in our own way permits overheated nationalism to run away with him. He and Ottawa can best serve Canadian letters by leaving bookseller, piblisher and writer alone.

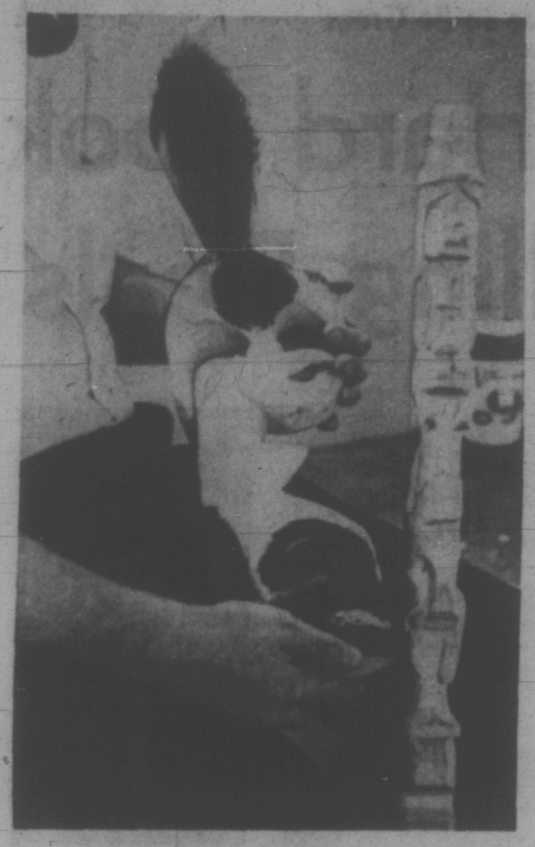
Life Outside Looks Better To Indians

Halfway house will help Indians released from William Head Prison



Wood carving will be encouraged

By ANN DUNSMUIR
Times Staff

Indian inmates at William Head Prison have organized a society to provide a halfway house for men released on parole.

Oscar Gislason, a member of the board of directors of the new Kua-Win-Nah Society, says the group is already caring for one parolee and a second will be released into its care today.

The society has applied for a grant from the First Citizen's Fund to help cover 50 per cent of capital costs.

Initial costs are expected to be about $73,000. This amount includes the cost of an eight-bedroom duplex in the Sooke area, furnishings, building materials and training equipment.

"The halfway house will allow inmates to continue training programs begun in prison until they find jobs," Gislason said.

He says statistics prove such a home is badly needed.

"The national failure rate for rehabilitation of Indians is 90 per cent, compared to 77 per cent for other races," Gislason said.

House Parents Chosen

Inmates chose Mr. and Mrs. Colin Pratt as house parents for the Kua-Win-Nah Halfway House. The couple hope to be settled into half the duplex by April 1.

"We need anything in the way of furniture and household equipment," Mrs. Pratt said. "So far, we don't have as much as a teaspoon."

She wants the "boys" to continue with crafts they learned in prison when they come to the home.

"We can't estimate how long it will take for residents to find work," she said.

"They can earn some money with their handicrafts and plant a garden to grow their own food," she added.

Mrs. Pratt became interested in the boys at the prison four years ago when she was "shanghied" to give a talk to the prison's Kua-Win-Nah Club, an Indian educational group.

At that time, she told the men: "It's too bad so many of you are here but there is good and bad in everybody. All I can say is the worst is yet to come. You'll have a difficult time getting employment. Come clean and let them know you don't intend to come back."

Remember Her Words

Inmates remembered her words and asked for the Pratts as house parents.

William Head Superintendent Gammalial Milner says the halfway house has been a "dream of inmates for some time." (About 20 per cent of the inmates in his institution are Indian.)

He said there are post release houses in all provinces where men can go and live while they look for work and adjust to society and release centres where men go out to work during the day and return at night for three months before they are released.

"Indians are not too receptive to these programs," Milner said. He thinks Indians want to be with their own people.

Milner thinks one reason the failure rate for Indians on parole is high may be because they "go back to the same life that got them into trouble in the first place."

He hopes the new home for parolees will "break this pattern.

"We will certainly support the home," the superintendent said.

Mrs. Colin Pratt will act as house mother to her 'boys'

Age of Promiscuity Debunked As More a Myth Than Fact

NEW YORK (UPI) — Is the teen-age sex revolution a lot of talk, a lot of truth — or a mixture of myth and fact?

There's this additional question, where teenagers and sex are concerned: Were yesteryear's teenagers more abstinent?

Phillips Cutright, professor of sociology at Indiana University in Bloomington, tackled the questions in a research project supported by the Commission on Population Growth and the American Future and by the Public Health Service.

Reporting in the journal, Family Planning Perspectives, published by Planned Parenthood Federation of America, Cutright debunks the teenage sex revolution as a contemporary phenomenon.

And he finds little evidence that teenagers of the decade beginning in 1940 were gifted with more abstinence. The so-called abstinent past of yesteryear's teen-agers? Cutright calls it a myth.

Illegitimate births rates per 1,000 unmarried women, ages 14 to 19, in the United States for the decades 1940, 1950, 1960 and the year 1968 show what appear to be sharp increases from decade to decade.

The illegitimacy or out of wedlock birth level has stood for years as one key indicator of sexual activity among teenagers.

Not Good Index

But it's not such a good index, according to the sociologist, who reported:

"In the past relatively poor health conditions may have moderated the consequences of nonmarital teenage sex.

"Improved health conditions appear to have increased the chances that an out-of-wedlock conception will be carried to term (hence, become visible and a problem), and have also increased the capacity of sexually active young girls to conceive."

Due to improve nutrition, it has been established, the age of menarche (the first menses) has been dropping. As the age drops the proportion of young girls able to conceive increases.

This alone would tend to increase the number of out of wedlock births even if there were no change in their pattern of sexual activity, according to Cutright.

"Aside from substantial increases in premarital sex among young whites with their future husbands," the sociologist said, "we find no evidence that a change in non-marital sex of 'revolutionary' proportions has occurred since 1940 among either white or non-white teenagers."

Sexual Problems Old

He noted that problems generated by teenage sexuality have "been with us for years" — as is the case with such other social problems as hunger, poverty and racial discrimination recently "discovered by politicians and social scientists."

"Hopefully, now that we have acknowledged that teenagers are having sex relations, recognizing that it is no new thing, we may act sensibly . . . rather than cling stubbornly to the myth of an 'age d'or' of sexual abstinence, or cheer on a largely non-existent sexual revolution to topple the establishment," the professor observed.

Facing up to the problem, he figures, means making medically supervised contraception and legal abortions available.

Access to these things, as the professor sees it, "is no more likely to encourage teenage promiscuity than denial of access has been to discourage teenage sexual activity."

Such access, however, "may save many young persons from the trauma of out-of-wedlock pregnancies, illegitimate births, botched illegal abortions and disastrous youthful marriages" — the professor concluded.

Birth Control a 'Right'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Single people have a right to freely obtain contraceptives if married people are permitted to by the state, the United States Supreme Court ruled Wednesday in upsetting a conviction of Bill Baird, a birth-control crusader.

"If the right of privacy means anything, it is the right of the individual, married or single, to be free from unwarranted governmental intrusion into matters so fundamentally affecting a person as the decision whether to bear or beget a child," said Justice William J. Brennan.

Brennan, the court's only Roman Catholic, delivered the 6 to 1 opinion that Baird could not be punished by Massachusetts for lecturing at Boston University on birth control and handing a package of vaginal foam to an unmarried woman.

The court was narrowly divided in barring the states from banning contraceptives to single people while permitting them for married persons. This holding was on a vote of 4 to 3.

Brennan said: "Whatever the rights of the individual to access to contraceptives may be, the rights must be the same for the unmarried and the married alike."

20,000 Unwanted Babies

By ANTHONY ASTRACHAN
Special to the Times

UNITED NATIONS — An American expert this week sought U.N. help in using his new abortion techniques to solve one of the saddest problems of the new state of Bangladesh — the estimated 20,000 pregnancies resulting from the rape of Bengali women by Pakistani soldiers before and during the war that made Bangladesh independent last December.

Harvey Karman, director of psychosomatic research at San Vicente Hospital in Los Angeles, said that during a brief stay in Bangladesh he had trained doctors and doctors' assistants — some as young as 16 — to perform minimum-risk abortions, some on women as much as seven months pregnant. Karman estimated that at least 1,000 abortions had been done there using his techniques.

Visited Bangladesh

Karman, who is a PhD but not an M.D., went to Bangladesh as a member of a five-man team including Britons and an Indian as well as two Americans.

They used the abortion techniques that Karman developed in a west Los Angeles clinic that has now been taken over by San Vicente Hospital.

One is a suction device with a flexible plastic tube that works rather like the syringe that a doctor uses to draw blood. The flexible tube insures that there will be no perforation of the uterus at the same time that it increases the ability to withdraw all the uterine contents. This technique is used on women three months pregnant or less.

The second technique involves inserting into the uterus one or more plastic coils which slowly uncoil when exposed to the moisture of the womb, inducing the equivalent of a normal miscarriage.

This "supercoil" can be inserted by anyone who has been taught to insert a Lippes loop, an intra-uterine birth-control device widely used on the subcontinent. Karman said that about 5,000 young women in East Pakistan had been trained to insert loops before Bangladesh became independent, and that they could help in the new program.

The coil techniques, used on women from three to seven months pregnant, results in less hospitalization and fewer complications than usually result from saline injections that are commonly used for late abortions, Karman said.

Karman says he has "never lost a uterus" with these techniques, which have been described in scientific papers covering 371 American cases in which the flexible or suction device was used and 56 using the coil.

Make Abortion Cheap

He said the use of the devices by paramedics would make abortion cheaper in the United States as they make it feasible in Bangladesh.

Authorities there were reporting 300 suicides a week among the pregnant women, Karman said. He added that many of these cases were not really suicides, but backfiring attempts at self-induced abortion.

Karman reported that one of his first Bengali patients was a 12-year-old girl who had walked across country for a month to find an abortion clinic. In most cases, the teams could not find rape victims easily because no village wanted to admit it had any. Many villages sent their pregnant girls to neighboring communities and took in another community's victims, to transfer the shame.

After the abortions many of the girls expect to go home

Abortions must be performed quickly or to a new village and pretend to virginity, they told Karman's team.

Bangladesh needs U.N. or other outside help primarily for a helicopter that would enable abortion teams to reach every village systematically, train paramedics and leave the equipment there, Karman said. The devices are cheap and, after being sterilized, reusable.

"At this point, it's a distribution problem, like food and everything else in Bangladesh," he added. It takes a helicopter half an hour to reach a village that may take 12 hours to reach by land and water.

Officials of the U.N. Relief Operation Dacca (UNROD) asked Karman for a detailed report. The natural speed of the U.N. bureaucracy makes it unlikely that UNROD could finance a helicopter in time to help women already pregnant, but it might be able to persuade a government or some voluntary agency to put up the money in time.

A church relief official said in January that up to 200,000 wives in Bangladesh were being ostracized by Bengali community because they had been raped.

The Rev. Kentaro Buma, Asian relief secretary of the World Council of Churches, said on his return from a trip to Dacca that tradition prevented most Moslem husbands from taking back their wives if they had been touched by another man, even if they were subdued by force.

Chicken 'Best Buy' for May

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Unlike a major eastern grocery chain which is advising consumers to switch from red meat to chicken and other foods if they want to bring beef prices down, the U.S. government is not directly suggesting any switches.

But in an announcement which makes no mention of beef prices, the agriculture department has put broiler-fryer chickens at the head of its list of "best-buy" foods for May.

Officials said chickens will be the prime feature item for May in their regular "plentiful foods" program. This is a long-standing publicity campaign designed to promote foods which are in ample supply at "attractive" retail prices.

Other "plentiful foods" on the just-released May list include several other protein items — eggs, milk and nonfat dry milk. Also included are fresh and processed potato products, canned peaches and canned fruit cocktail.

Officials said, in response to questions, that beef last was included in the government "plentiful foods" list nearly five years ago — in June, 1967.

The new list said chickens were being featured for May because production in that month is expected to be 7 per cent above a year ago, "and prospects are good for a plentiful supply . . . at prices attractive to consumers."

On other foods, the announcement added:

● Milk production will be at or near its peak for the year (with) ample supplies.

● Storage supplies from last year's potato crop were near-record on March 1. This, coupled with spring crops, will put pressure on fresh markets and assure "economical pricing." In addition, stocks of frozen french fries and instant mashed potatoes are large.

● Egg production in May will be near the high level of a year ago, producing "attractive prices."

● Canned fruit cocktail stocks continue high.

Although the number of adult cyclists has been rapidly increasing, most of Canada's six million bicycles belong to children and young teenagers.

The 28-page Cyclist's Handbook will prove invaluable to every cyclist, but particularly to a child lacking cycling know-how.

The booklet informs about bicycle care, traffic laws and safety factors. There are also a number of challenging cycling tests to find out how skilful a rider your child is.

Language Secondary Issue In Bridging Communication

TORONTO (CP) — A group of local elementary schoolchildren and their Ojibway Indian visitors from a remote community in Northern Ontario are on a discovery tour of Toronto.

All of the technological, social and cultural marvels of the big city have been swirling by as they drink in the pyrotechnic futuristic wonders of the Ontario Science Centre, the Queen Elizabeth planetarium, Toronto's rush-hour subway crowds, and the view from the 52-storey Toronto Dominion Centre office tower.

Out of it all has come one discovery that shatters the barriers of white and Indian culture:

"We communicate a lot without language," says Gary MacLeod, a student at St. Monica's School in Toronto.

Gary and his classmates are the hosts of 10 Ojibway children from Grades 1 to 4 from a tiny village near Lansdowne House, 200 miles north of Lake Nipigon in Northern Ontario.

But Gary, and his brother Colin, 13, as well as their teacher, Gino Ferri, feel this poses no problem at all.

Mr. Ferri said Tuesday that, although only three days had elapsed since the children arrived in Toronto, Colin and Gary had made better contact than had been expected.

The family of each of the participating Toronto children put up one or two visitors in their home. The Ojibway children are accompanied by their principal and a teacher's aide.

It is the first time any of the children have left the reserve. "The biggest thing was when we reached the subway," said Colin, who accompanied Sandy Moonias, 6, on trips around the city.

"Even though they had all been on a train, they sat there in amazement. Then they would look out the window and say, "what's that?" "

Rules for Visitors

DEAR ABBY: That letter in your column about the woman who had a sign in her living room saying, "Thanks for Not Smoking," might have surprised some folks, but not me. I believe in putting up signs.

In fact, I have a big poster with red letters on my front door which says:

"For all who wish to pass through this door:

1. No smoking inside. It makes me sick.

2. If you bring your kids, either take care of them yourself or leave them outside.

3. I am not a bank, so don't ask to borrow any money.

4. I am not a grocer, so don't ask to borrow any groceries.

5. I am not in the hotel business, so don't ask me to put you up overnight.

6. Don't bring me your problems, I've got my own.— (Signed) The Establishment.

Abby, I am 28 and have a husband and four kids and they come first. Since I have had this poster on my front door, lots of folks have said I was nuts, but I don't care. This is the first time in my life I have had any privacy. Sign me "That nutty lady with the sign on her door" . . . or — Shirley.

DEAR SHIRLEY: I'll wager that your poster nets you more privacy than a 200-pound dog. (And you don't have to feed the poster!)

Angela Hernandez, 23, fights for rights

Spanish Bullring Scene Of Major Sex Battle?

Why not, says Angela Hernandez, who is challenging a 40-year ban in Spain against women fighting bulls on foot.

"This is part of the women's liberation effort," she says.

"Women should have the same rights as men, including fighting bulls in public. Why can't I do it?"

A 23-year-old blonde, Miss Hernandez has rocked the establishment further by announcing she intends to take her case to the Spanish Supreme Court, if necessary.

Most bullfighters, managers and fans think she hasn't got a chance.

Paco Camino, president of the Spanish Bullfighters' Association, says he is all for women having equal rights, "but I repeat women shouldn't fight bulls because a bullfighter is and should be a man."

The nearest thing to a classicist in modern bullfighting, Camino has appeared in the same ring with Miss Hernandez when she fights from a horse. She has been a rejoneadora — fighting from horseback — since she was nine. But she is not allowed to dismount and kill the bull at the end as her male counterparts do.

Miss Hernandez, however, wants to forget about horses altogether and fight on the ground because "that's where the money is."

She thinks she will be an added draw to any male bullfight card.

Up to 1929, women in Spain could fight bulls on foot. The dictatorship of Primo de Rivera ordered a ban that lasted until 1931, when the Republican government restored the right. But the government of Gen. Francisco Franco cancelled it at the start of the Spanish civil war in 1936 and it has remained since.

What to Say Is Easy, But What Not to Say?

I suspect that Supermothers wouldn't dream of sleeping late on Saturday mornings.

Supermothers probably consider 6 a.m. on Saturday an ideal time for creative activities such as baking gingerbread men and teaching their children how to make cunning papier-mache hand puppets out of back issues of the New Republic.

I long ago disabused our children of the notion that I would engage in any maternal camaraderie on Saturday mornings before 9:30. I informed them that Daddy and I were to be awakened only in cases of fire, flood, or arterial bleeding ("Yes, dear, the spurty kind") and that we were not to be roused from a sound slumber to be asked what language they speak in Zanzibar, how chickens reproduce, whether they can go to camp next August, or why the elephant painted his toenails red.

I wouldn't want anyone to think that I simply give the children laissez-faire to chop each other's ears off with rusty bread knives or set fire to the piano. Knowing that they wouldn't do anything expressly forbidden, I attempt to anticipate potential trouble by issuing an early morning ultimatum into the darkness. "Don't hit each other with blunt instruments, drink bleach, light matches, go outside to make a snowman in your pajamas, and if you telephone Grandma long distance, be sure that you reverse the charges."

Unfortunately I am handicapped in that I don't think like a child.

If I had thought like a child last Saturday morning I might have added, "Don't put blue food coloring in your bathwater, put Hershey bars in the toaster, or wash Daddy's sweaters in the dishwasher."

Since I am woefully short on imagination, the children are doomed to spend the rest of their lives light blue from the waist down, the toast tastes like scorched rubber bands, and we now have four men's sweaters, size 6x.

Continuity Needed In Balcony Planters

Balcony planters may be windswept, gale-ridden and otherwise exposed to the more lion-like characteristics of March, but they are not likely to be under water as are many of our down-to-earth gardens.

To take advantage of the dryer and therefore somewhat warmer soils in the balcony tubs and planters, apartment-dwelling gardeners should get either their seeds or their plants started ahead of us ground-lubbers.

Hardy plants like pansies and polyanthus primulas can be planted into these containers now. They are in bud and bloom, and their bright faces, some gently fragrant, will last for many weeks if seed formation is prevented by removing faded flowers promptly.

Dwarf varieties of snapdragons will make a fine color show in apartment balcony planters, especially if they get sun for only a part of each day, for they scarcely flower at all if conditions are too hot.

Snaps are a hardy annual producing quantities of flower spikes in succession from early May until late October.

Cutting off each old spike just before the last flowers fade promotes growth of new spikes. With the limited number of plants in a balcony garden it is quite possible to give this attention plus the amount of water required and two small dressings of 6-8-6 fertilizer during summer.

The balcony gardener now can also put in the perennial herb plants wanted for permanent use; a pail or tub full of mint and a patch of chives for nearly all-year-round use; and sow seeds of parsley, sweet marjoram, summer savory, dill and chervil.

In fact, any herb, even the ancient but seldom seen sorrel, purslane and burnet can be sown in balcony planters now for invigorating appetizers.

The only one to be withheld until warmer weather is sweet basil. This needs real warmth, being native to East India. It will do well if sown in a warm spell towards the end of May.

If your preference runs to dwarf ornamental shrubs now you can get suitable soil for those you buy — acid type soil mixture for those preferring acid, and a neutral but still with plenty of humus for the non-acid.

Within the limits of a balcony garden one must remain with one theme for a season, or there will be nothing more than a confusion of different plants in a small space.

With a theme, there will be continuity and a sense of peace which is after all the ultimate in a garden today at whatever level. For out of peace comes renewal of endeavor and the ability to achieve.

SOLUTION FRIDAY

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

I doubt seriously whether the casual bridge player is going to approve of East's double in today's deal. Admittedly, it was a very risky bid and, on some other day, it could have proven costly to his side. But the logic was there, even if the high cards were not.

As principle, whenever partner has bid, and the opponents arrive at a game contract in notrump, a double by the bidder's partner commands the bidder to lead the suit which he has bid, instead of some other suit. In this deal, had East not made his gambling double, West almost surely would have led a suit that would have given the victory to South.

Both sides vulnerable. West deals.

SOUTH
♠ Q 9 7 3
◇ A K 6
♣ K 4 2

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	2 ♣	Pass	3 NT
Pass	Pass	Dbl.	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Seven of ♡.

If East had not doubled South's three-notrump bid, West almost surely would have opened the diamond queen, on the assumption that South had good protection in the heart suit. Had a diamond been opened, South would have won the trick with the king, after which he would have led a spade, driving out West's ace. No matter what West now played back, he could not have prevented declarer making ten tricks: three spades, two diamonds and five clubs.

But, in accord with accepted procedure, when East made his double, it was a command to West to lead the suit that he had bid. So West dutifully opened his fourth-highest heart, and East's queen was taken by South's king.

All South now had were eight tricks. And, of course, if he led a spade, in an attempt to create his game going trick, West would win with the ace. He would then cash four heart tricks, thus handing declarer a one-trick set.

After winning the first trick with his king of hearts, South cashed five club tricks, discarding two spades from his own hand. West had no problem in making a discard on the fourth club — he tossed away the nine of diamonds. But on the fifth club he had a serious problem as to what to discard.

After some thought, he parted with the diamond ten, hoping that his partner possessed a guard in this suit. As it turned out, East's original holding of the 8-7-2 of diamonds effectively prevented declarer from cashing more than two diamond tricks. But if South's six of diamonds and East's eight had been interchanged (giving South the A-K-8), South would have made three diamond tricks, and his contract.

The Lord is my shepherd: I shall not want.
He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters.
He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake.
Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil: for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies; thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.

YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

A Scientific Look at Hypnotism

Of late, I have been enjoying Smithsonian, the journal put out by the great Institution in Washington, D.C. In a recent issue there is an unusually good article on hypnosis, written by Madeleine Lundberg and Lawrence Massett. As they say, scientists are divided into opposing camps about the value of hypnosis in medicine and psychology. Hypnosis is approved by the American Medical Association and is used by some dentists to make people insensitive to pain. The American Psychological Association has created a division devoted to the study of the practice.

According to Dr. T. X. Barber, director of psychological research at Medfield State Hospital in Massachusetts, "Hypnosis has been used for 200 years. The more people think about it, the more confused they get. Eventually, in 10 years or so, they'll realize the best thing to do is to drop the concept altogether."

Dr. Milton Erickson, an Arizona psychiatrist, says, "I cannot explain sleep, but I am sure that I do sleep . . . We will continue to explore and discover many additional manifestations of hypnosis."

One of the biggest problems still facing neurologists is to find out just what hypnotism is, and how the brain can act in such peculiar ways during hypnosis. This lack of exact knowledge persists in spite of years of research. Some people are almost impossible to hypnotize and others are easy to hypnotize. Some can even hypnotize themselves, and many people are good at pretending to by hypnotized.

That some definite change takes place in the brain is suggested by the fact that a willing subject can become insensitive to pain. A number of big operations have been performed with hypnosis as the only anesthetic.

Very interesting in this connection is the story about Dr. Esdaile, a Scot who went to India and performed 250 operations on unanesthetized Hindus without hurting them. When he went back to Scotland and tried to hypnotize the canny Scots and then operate on them the hypnotism did not work.

One of the difficulties in studying hypnotism is that no one can be sure when a person is hypnotized and when he is not. Some people display a trancelike appearance, with a sort of blank expression, as "hypnotized" people do in movies. Unfortunately, this does not always happen.

Scientists have searched hard for some physiologic sign, like some change in the heart-beat or the brain wave pattern that might show the presence of the hynotic state, but so far no one has had any luck in this field of this study. The only physical changes, according to Dr. Martin Orne, professor of psychiatry at the University of Pennsylvania, are those that "normally go along with drowsiness and relaxation."

Some psychoanalysts, such as Dr. Herbert Spiegel, clinical professor at Columbia Medical School, use hypnosis in treatment of certain problems, such as smoking.

Forced Share Sale Sought by Imasco

Imasco Ltd. plans to force the sale of remaining publicly-held shares in Growers Wine Co. Ltd., having had a majority of outstanding stock tendered under terms of a November offer.

The Montreal-based conglomerate bid $4 each for class A and $3.75 for class B shares of Growers to add to its previously-owned stock, amounting to 64 per cent of the issued shares.

The remaining 36 per cent, amounting to 441,956 shares, were publicly-held when the offer was made Nov. 10.

Imasco president Paul Pare said today the company had obtained 94 per cent of the A shares and 97 per cent of the B shares.

Having secured more than 90 per cent of the outstanding shares, Imasco is entitled under B.C. law to acquire the remainder.

One of a group of local shareholders opposed to the offer, claiming it did not recognize true value of the shares, said he would continue to resist the takeover.

Harold Hesketh said he is willing to stand with other minority shareholders up to the point of actual takeover, but said he is not in a position to carry the fight into court. He also said he doubted, from what he knows of the feeling of other stockholders, that Imasco has more than 90 per cent of the A and B shares in Growers.

Timber Sale Tax Tagged 'Punitive'

Federal taxation of depreciation allowances on timber sale licences in British Columbia is "punitive treatment" which is not being applied to any other province, Liberal Leader Pat McGeer said Wednesday.

"In no other province of Canada is this interpretation being made," he told the legislature.

McGeer said the tax is costing the forest industry $7 million annually. He said it is being applied on the principle that these licences are given foever.

Cheque Nets Jail Term

Linda Kezele, 23, was sentenced to four months in prison when she appeared in provincial court today for sentencing on a charge of fraud.

Miss Kezele told police she cashed a worthless cheque at the suburban Montreal bank where she worked last year and gave the money to a man who was then her boyfriend. She said she had seen neither the man nor any of the money since.

Judge William Ostler said he was imposing a light sentence because the fraud was "an impulsive, one-time act" which had brought no profit to the accused.

In addition to the jail term, Miss Kezele was placed on two years' probation.

Jurisdiction in the case had been waived to B.C. by Quebec provincial court.

Growing Laos War 'Political'

By THAUNG MYINE

VIENTIANE (Reuter) — The three million inhabitants of the tiny kingdom of Laos find themselves trapped in a seemingly interminable war which they can do nothing to control.

Basically the war, fought primarily in the mountains and jungles by foreign foes, is a spillover from the wider Vietnam conflict. And the main protagonists—the United States and North Vietnam—seem compelled to widen it through their failure to reach a settlement in Vietnam.

Premier Prince Souvanna Phouma says North Vietnam has increased its forces in Laos to a record 80,000 this year. It also launched a dry-season offensive which was far bigger and earlier than those of previous years.

The premier says the reason for these moves is primarily political. He feels that, in the light of President Nixon's visit to Peking, the North Vietnamese wanted to show both the Chinese and the Americans that no settlement of the over-all Indochina conflict can be made without Hanoi's consent.

SUPPORT HANOI TROOPS

The North Vietnamese have local support from the Pathet Lao, a Laotian Communist group who have accused Prince Souvanna Phouma's government of having become "lackeys of American imperialism."

But one American official in Vientiane has belittled the role of the Pathet Lao, saying they are little more than porters for the North Vietnamese troops. The same official also claimed that Pathet Lao strength, estimated at one time at 50,000, has been badly shaken by at least 15,000 defections.

'AMERICANS' ADVISE'

Pitted against the North Vietnamese and the Pathet Lao are the Royal Lao forces, a number of Thai irregulars and the Meo guerrillas, an almost independent army of ethnic hill tribesmen. These groups, numbering about 60,000 in all, are trained and equipped by the United States.

There are also an undisclosed number of Americans who "advise" the government troops up to the moment of actual battle. One Japanese correspondent who visited the American Long Cheng base north of Vientianne said he counted at least 200 such Americans at a nearby supply base.

The Americans, who are battle-equipped, are known locally as "armed American officials."

These "officials" and the government forces are closely supported by massive air power from U.S. military aircraft based in Thailand and elsewhere.

And, suggests one senior neutral diplomat here, the chances are that, as the U.S. accelerates its troop withits material and air support to its material and air support to neighboring Laos will increase.

Because such support does not involve unacceptable loss of American lives, he argued, United States will not present the administration with the problems it has faced from anti-Vietnam protests.

IT'S A BUNNY, GIRL, but Heidi doesn't seem to mind. The three-year old dachshund, owned by Mr. and Mrs. Lou Garrett of Selah, Wash., was despondent over the death of a puppy, so her owners placed a new-born rabbit with her. The bunny started nursing, and Heidi didn't object, so two others have been added to the family.

Classical Plays on Film

NEW YORK (UPI) — Columbia Pictures and the American Express Co. have agreed to create "The American Film Theatre," a venture which will produce movie versions of classical plays and distribute them to theatres on a subscription basis.

In its initial season, the group plans to make at least eight films, including Harold Pinter's "The Homecoming," Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and Eugene O'Neil's "The Iceman Cometh." The first film is expected to premiere in October.

An estimated 500 participating theatres in the United States and Canada are taking part in the plan.

Ely Landau, who has produced plays such as "The Pawnbroker" and "The Madwoman of Chaillot," will be in overall charge of film production, while Columbia will handle distribution and American Express will take care of promotion and ticket sales.

He's a Judge and He Likes the Job

duncan cowichan

By DONNA CLEMENTS
Times Staff

DUNCAN — Provincial court Judge Fredrick Green of Duncan likes his work.

"I feel it is a job that has to be done and I want to be one of the people doing it," he said in an interview today. "The job is challenging and rewarding."

Green, 35, will become a full-time criminal court judge in Victoria on April 1.

He was made a judge last June and has been working on an ad hoc basis in Nanaimo.

"I think there is an increasing responsibility upon the courts to cope with the problems of society. Particularly the people who come before the courts but nevertheless must be coped within the framework of the law."

Green and his wife Betty, both natives of Victoria, have three children: Lee, 10; Cathy, 9; and Lori, 8. They have already purchased a home in the capital.

Judge Green was a lawyer in Duncan for 10 years after he articled in Victoria following his graduation from the University of British Columbia with law and commerce degrees.

Green said he is not pessimistic about youths today but is "cautiously optimistic."

While dealing with young people in his court, Green says, he always tries to impress upon them that the court is genuinely interested in them.

"I think dealing with youthful offenders is one of the most difficult tasks for a provincial judge. Especially while trying to impress upon them that we are not only concerned with punishment but the offenders' well-being and rehabilitation.

"I do this by showing genuine concern and if a sentence has to be imposed by imposing, if at all possible, one that will help the offender. At the same time I try to make them realize that they have breached an obligation they have to society."

I feel this way about all people who appear before me."

He said he also finds dealing with drug offenders difficult.

"I do not agree with the usage of drugs or the legalization of the use of soft drugs," he said.

Chretien Should Apologize—McDiarmid

DUNCAN — Port Alberni MLA Dr. Howard McDiarmid said Wednesday federal Northern Affairs Minister Jean Chretien should apologize to B.C. conservation minister Ken Kiernan. The MLA said in a speech to the Cowichan Valley Hoo Hoo Club that Chretien spoke to a public meeting about changes in Pacific Rim Park development before meeting with Kiernan on the subject.

McDiarmid was referring to the federal minister's recent speech to the Victoria chapter of the Sierra Club. Chretien told the chapter his department is seeking to have all the Nitinat Triangle included in the third phase of the park.

McDiarmid said the two lakes the Tsusiat and Squalicum, should not be included in the national park.

"I feel we should preserve areas in B.C. that have a priority obviously in terms of recreation first."

He said the triangle has limited recreational potential and many people are pushing for it simply because it is natural. He said that 99.9 per cent of the people will only be interested in the area "if it is beautiful."

McDiarmid said he believes in the life saving trail of the triangle because it is right out on the coast "where you can get the vista and see the horizon. I think a lot of people will be walking in the sand along the beaches. The coastline is definitely a superlative piece of nature. I feel the trail will get a lot of use but the amount of people that will venture into the lakes is another question. They don't even have beaches around them and people have to take a whip just to get timber cruisers there."

Meanwhile, McDiarmid said, Kiernan had submitted a proposal to Ottawa where the provincial government may be willing to sacrifice 8,000 acres in the Long Beach area in an attempt to include two lakes in the triangle.

"Chretien said he never had time to study the proposal but if he had visited our minister he would have," McDiarmid said. "I think he should make a public apology to our minister. It is great political stuff but morally as wrong as can be. How do you deal with people who make an agreement but deals outside?"

Bid Call Approved

DUNCAN — Health Minister Ralph Loffmark Wednesday gave the Cowichan District Hospital Board permission to call for tenders for construction of a new 100-bed extended care hospital here.

Seventy-five beds will be ready for occupancy immediately after construction.

Retiring board chairman John Hulbert said today construction on the $1 million dollar project should begin about the end of April.

Driver Following Too Closely

DUNCAN — A coroner's jury Wednesday night decided that a 16-year-old Duncan girl was following too close to the car ahead and was not concentrating on her driving in an accident Feb. 28 which claimed the life of a 19-year-old Victoria girl near Duncan.

Donna Gail Watson, of 1668 Estevan Ave., died accidentally, the jury ruled and made no recommendations.

Duncan RCMP said no charges are contemplated at this time.

The victim was riding in a car driven by Dann Marchessault, of 1385 Manor Road, Victoria, when it crashed with the Duncan girls' vehicle, about two miles south of Duncan.

N.Z. Bans Race Discrimination

WELLINGTON, N.Z. (AP) — Racial discrimination will be formally outlawed in New Zealand April 1 when a Race Relations Act comes into force.

The act endorses and expands in law the high degree of racial harmony in this country's European and Polynesian society.

The new law enables New Zealand to join the 54 other countries which have ratified the 1966 International Convention on Racial Discrimination. Under the act the post of race relations conciliator is established. He will investigate and, where possible, settle complaints of racial discrimination.

The first conciliator has been named as Sir Guy Powles who, as New Zealand's ombudsman for the last nine years, has been the chief investigator of complaints by the public against administrative decisions of the public service.

Foreign Minister Sir Keith Holyoake says that because racial equality has long been fundamental to the New Zealand way of life, existing laws and practices have largely been consistent with the international convention.

CAN BE FINED

The act plugs some loopholes. Incitement to racial discrimination is made an offence punishable by a maximum of three months' imprisonment or fine of $500. Incitement of racial disharmony includes the publication or broadcasting of threatening, abusive or insulting words on the grounds of color, race, or ethnic or national origins.

The law prohibits discrimination in access to public places, vehicles and facilities; in the provision of goods and services; in employment, land, housing and accommodation; and in advertising.

The attorney-general may institute proceedings in the Supreme Court, which has power to grant a wide range of remedies including damages of $500.

Some racial distinctions will remain. Four of the 84 seats in the House of Representatives will continue to be reserved for Maoris—without precluding Maoris from contesting or winning any of the 80 "European" seats.

Specific programs for the advancement of Maoris — in housing, hostels, training centres and education will be maintained.

There are 210,000 Maoris in New Zealand's population of 2,860,000 and successive governments have striven for racial harmony while preserving Maori culture and upholding Maori tradition.

Canada Art Banff Theme

BANFF, Alta. (CP) — Canadian works will form a major part of the program at the second Banff Festival of the Arts next August, says Dr. David Leighton, director of the Banff Centre.

"We agree with recent statements that there are insufficient outlets for Canadian authors, playwrights and choreographers," he said.

"With this in mind we are prepared to make our summer festival a major production vehicle for Canadian works."

Phoney Nuptials Fail, Illegal Immigrant Jailed

VANCOUVER — A marriage scheme that was to have given a visiting East Indian landed-immigrant status in Canada has instead put him and a partner in crime in jail.

Gurdial Singh and Nirmal Singh Bains were sentenced to jail for one year after they pleaded guilty to conspiring with an 18-year-old girl and other unknown persons to make false statements to Canadian immigration officials in order to get Bains status as a landed immigrant.

Court was told that evidence showed the girl — a Canadian citizen — was to be paid to marry Bains and go with him to an immigration office where she would sponsor his application for landed status. It was agreed that the girl would not live with her new husband, and that later a divorce would be obtained.

Joe Wood, counsel for Gurdial said that the accused was victimized "by certain unscrupulous members of his community who have been making vast sums in the process." He said the phoney marriages cost $3,000 to $4,000.

WASHINGTON — Arthur K. Watson, U.S. ambassador to France who was reported by columnist Jack Anderson to have been drunk on a recent transatlantic flight, will not handle substantive U.S.-Chinese negotiations in Paris, says Senator J. W. Fulbright, head of the Senate foreign relations committee.

"The ambassador was never intended to be the negotiator," Fulbright quoted Rogers as saying.

people

MARSEILLES — Monsieur Jo, the legendary heroin chemist whose arrest last week was reported to have saved him from an underworld death, was found dead in his cell Wednesday night.

Authorities said Joseph Cesari, 54, hanged himself. He was caught last Thursday in his secret laboratory with $25 million worth of drugs. Reports circulating then said he was marked for death by gangsters who thought he turned in two local drug dealers.

OTTAWA — Prime Minister Trudeau starts his third trip of the year into Ontario today, denying that the tours foretell an election.

The two-day trips — with stops in Toronto, Kitchener and Hamilton — fit the formula he has used on most of his trips in the last year: A question period with students, a town meeting, a visit to an old people's home, meetings with ethnic groups and an open-line television appearance.

VANCOUVER — A charge of illegally feeding polar bears in the Stanley Park zoo was dismissed Wednesday against Elias Fawzi Adel, an unemployed mechanical engineer from Egypt.

A zoo keeper said he saw what appeared to be a chocolate bar about to be thrown by the accused, but Adel said he was waving to the bears and he was actually holding a brown fur hat in his hand.

TORONTO — Broadcaster Betty Kennedy suffered lacerations and bruises in an explosion in Belfast Wednesday, radio station CRB said. About 40 persons were injured in the blast.

TORONTO — Otto Jelinek, who with his sister Maria once held the world pairs figure skating championship, won the Progressive Conservative nomination Wednesday night in the Toronto High Park riding for the next federal election. The riding now is held by Liberal Walter Deakon.

VANCOUVER — A 33-year-old Vancouver man was sentenced Wednesday to three months in jail for attempting to extort money from entertainers Dean Martin and Jim Nabors.

Victor Louis Pederson admitted he mailed letters to Dean Martin's agent and Jim Nabors' wife, threatening to kill the entertainers if he wasn't paid a total of $5,000.

KELSO, Wash. — The U.S. cavalry Wednesday joined the search for "D. B. Cooper" who parachuted from a hijacked plane last November with $200,000. But the FBI believes he may be dead.

Troops from the 3rd Armored cavalry regiment at Fort Lewis, Wash., searched an area near here in support of FBI investigation teams from Seattle. Earl Milnes, FBI agent in charge at Seattle, said "we are continuing our investigation into the disappearance of Cooper and the army is assisting us in a terrain search."

HITLER PLAYS TO LAUGHS

VIENNA (UPI) — Adolf Hitler is the laughing stock of the Viennale Film Festival, organizers said Wednesday.

The Austrian-born dictator is being greeted with hoots of laughter every time he appears on the screen at Vienna's first post-war revival of Nazi propaganda films.

"We had never dreamed of such an effect," said Peter Konlechner, 34, chief organizer of the annual Viennale's movie museum. "We were slightly worried how these old Nazi films would be received, but there has been only one common reaction to Hitler's screen appearance — laughter."

The two-week program of Nazi propaganda and Allied counter-propaganda movies chronicling Hitler's rise and fall is playing to packed houses.

"It's the biggest hit in the Viennale's 10-year history," Konlechner said.

"Most of our audience are young people who never saw Hitler alive," Konlechner said. "They are eager to learn about the man their parents adored during the pre-war period. The common reaction is a widespread disappointment."

Konlechner emphasized, however, that the crowd also ridicules Allies counter-propaganda films when overdone.

"They are not one-sided and have definitely learned their lesson from the past," he said. "They would never fall again for a big liar."

Woodcock Holds the Key

WASHINGTON (WPI) — Nixon administration officials are ready to continue the phase II controls program with an all-public pay board, if that proves necessary, it was learned Wednesday night.

Policy-makers, although taken by surprise by the walkout of three AFL-CIO members from the 15-man tripartite board noted that the union statement carefully skirted any open defiance of a future public board.

"If the wage stabilization program is to be government-controlled, let it be so, openly and clearly . . . without the facade of labor representation and the pretense of tripartitism," the AFL-CIO statement said.

That was taken as a go-ahead from President George Meany for a controls program, with no open or even veiled threat that AFL-CIO unions would strike against government pay orders.

"They're saying," one observer suggested, "that Nixon can run the show while they sit on the sidelines and take potshots at him."

A pay board source said that it intends to conduct "business as usual" today, although another official suggested that the cost of living council might suggest a postponement of the session pending word on whether Leonard Woodcock, head of the United Auto Workers, will stay on the board.

Sources in and out of the administration Wednesday night agreed that the key to immediate events will be whether Woodcock continues on the board, along with Frank F. Fitzsimmons of the Teamsters.

If Woodcock stays on, the administration has several options. It could maintain the tripartite status by going to a bloc system of voting, with the two labor men equal to the 5 public and five business members; it could pare the board down from 15 to 6, with equal membership among the three camps; or try to fill in the posts vacated by the AFL-CIO with "independent" labor representatives.

Either of the first two options would probably be easier for Woodcock and Fitzsimmons to live with.

But a knowledgeable source Wednesday night said that he felt "Woodcock will have to walk (out)" even though he might be reluctant to do so. That would make an all-public board the most probably course of action.

MILLION JOBLESS IN BRITAIN

LONDON (AP) — The number of unemployed in Britain in March topped one million for the third straight month with no sign the worst labor crisis since the Second World War is easing, official figures showed today.

The employment ministry said 1,014,511 persons were out of work this month.

The only encouraging signs are a sharp increase in the number of job vacancies—up 13,191 this month to 157,656—and a drop in the number of layoffs —18,000 in February compared with 23,000 the month before.

Muskie Finds Key

CHICAGO (WP) — Illinois has given Sen. Edmund Muskie the biggest victory of his presidential campaign, and with it, many of his advisers believe, the key to the strategy that may enable him to wrest the Democratic nomination fron Sen. Hubert Humphrey.

Virtually complete returns from the slow count of delegate contests in Tuesday's voting showed Wednesday that Muskie had beaten Sen. George McGovern by a 4-to-1 margin in their head-to-head contest for convention votes.

That victory, along with Muskie's 5-to-3 win over ex-Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy in the separate non-binding presidential preference poll, continued a pattern of victories for the Maine senator over various liberal challengers in all the early presidential primaries.

Muskie advisers said Wednesday that the way is now open, beginning in April 4 Wisconsin primary, for Muskie to consolidate liberal support for an eventual showdown with Humphrey, the man they expect to emerge as the favorite of "old guard" Democratic elements.

Outdoor Schooling Limps After Referendum Defeat

By HUMPHRY DAVY
Times Staff

The defeat of the recent school operating referendum has reduced chances that Greater Victoria school district can adopt a highly successful pilot project—outdoor education, Dr. Harold Knight, a school trustee, said Wednesday.

"But it's too important a program to scrap," he said. "We will keep the project going on a limited basis. The board has set aside the modest sum of $1,500 for outdoor education for the whole district — a ridiculous small sum."

Knight said the provincial government should provide funds to enable school boards to incorporate the program in school curriculums.

"This is a most important area of education," he said. "I can't over-emphasize it. But it requires some input from the government. At present we are carrying on the program on a piecemeal basis."

Outdoor education is a program enabling students to spend a week outdoors where they are taught their skills through recreational activities — in a practical and visual way.

AWARENESS

It also attempts to develop environmental awareness through studies in conservation, ecology and natural resources and gives pupils an opportunity to learn new recreational skills.

Pupils in Grades 6 and 7 at Margaret Jenkins Elementary last spring took part in a pilot project at Thunderbird camp at Sooke. It proved an outstanding success and students this year are raising funds to take another outdoor course.

The outdoor recreation course was started in 1960 by the North Vancouver school board and it has since spread to other areas of the province.

In Ontario, outdoor education is part of the school curriculum.

Hugh Murray, a Victoria teacher involved in the North Vancouver Outdoor education program, said the program has worked miracles with students.

"Students were able to realize the value of the various subjects," he explained. "Education became meaningful.

Murray said the outdoor recreation activities, such as canoeing, hiking, archery, bird and animals studies, also provided students with new spare time activities.

Knight said the basic problem facing the outdoor course is that the department of education doesn't recognize it — despite studies in the United States and Canada showing it is one of the best educational programs in years.

"Outdoor education is wholly a local responsibility," he said. "It is still not possible for school districts to acquire land or erect buildings outside their district for such a program.

Rent Hike Sought

A higher price for rental of the McPherson restaurant is being sought by Victoria city hall.

The McPherson Seafood and Steakhouse, owned by the city, has been operated by restaurateur Cliff Clarke, whose lease expired about one year ago.

The rental has been about $7,000 a year, according to Clarke, who wants the city to renovate some of the restaurant's facilities.

Ald. Ove Witt said the city is looking for a "better deal" than that offered by Clarke for a renewed lease.

A point of argument has arisen over Clarke's use of the restaurant equipment for his catering service. Clarke says the catering has been practised since he first operated the restaurant.

Easter, with all it's colors, is just around the corner. And the first 16 pictures are on the house at all participating dealers.

All the 400 Land cameras are so automatic, getting beautiful color shots in one minute (or black-and-white in seconds) has never been easier or more fun.

There's also our Focused Flash attachment.

There are optional accessories (for the 440 and 450) that let you take close-ups, portraits, even self-portraits.

Just don't wait until the last minute.

After Easter, when you ask for two packs of color film, you have to pay for them.

Firemen check rubble left by Ireland's latest bomb blast

Peace Rejection Rumor Deepens Ulster Crisis

Times News Services

LONDON — Northern Ireland Premier Brian Faulkner flew back to London today for further crisis talks with Prime Minister Edward Heath. Reports circulated in Belfast that Northern Ireland had rejected Heath's peace plan aimed at ending violence in Ulster.

And in Carrickfergus, Northern Ireland, a huge terrorist bomb blast injured 12 persons after a false tip forced police to evacuate the wrong area of the market town.

The explosion — caused by up to 200 pounds of gelignite in a parked car — shattered buildings in North Street after police were told the bomb was in West Street.

Security forces said it was "deliberate misinformation" on the same pattern as Belfast's Donegall Streeet blast earlier this week in which six persons were killed and 150 were injured.

The casualties in Carrickfergus — none was seriously hurt — included three policemen.

In the House of Commons in London, Gerard Fitt, Northern Ireland Republican MP, reported the rumors that Heath's peace plan had been rejected and said if this were true there could be "communal violence and disturbances" in Ulster this weekend.

Heath and Faulkner met for nearly 10 hours Wednesday to discuss the plan, believed to offer more civil rights to the minority Roman Catholics; then each held urgent meetings with their cabinets in London and Belfast.

After the Belfast meeting the cabinet issued a statement saying it was united behind Faulkner but without saying whether it was for or against the peace proposals. Rejection of the peace package could lead to Britain's seizing control of the Ulster government.

Heath received a telephone call from Faulkner and then called in his top ministers, including Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home who had cut short an official visit to Israel to help out with the crisis.

London's silence and the Belfast statement about cabinet unity were interpreted by politicians here as an indication the two governments are deeply at loggerheads about concessions the British want Faulkner to make to the RCs.

The two prime ministers conferred by telephone after their respective cabinet meetings. Political sources said Britain was holding over Faulkner's head the threat of suspension of the province's local government and imposition of direct rule from London if the British proposals are rejected.

Women in Belfast's Protestant Sandy Row district took steps today to thwart the booby-trapping of vehicles. They threw up barricades of furniture and garbage to prevent cars from parking. Two bombs have exploded in parked cars in the district in the past two weeks.

"If anyone leaves his car in Sandy Row he'll find it wrecked when he comes back," Mrs. Patricia Neal said. "They can jail us if they like, but we're going to protect our homes."

Embattled Principal Supported

Special to the Times

CAMPBELL RIVER — A campaign to support embattled high school principal John Young got a boost Wednesday night when a public meeting gave him an overwhelming vote of confidence.

There were about six dissenters when chairman Jack Torrance called for a confidence vote and 650 persons including about 450 adults shouted their approval.

The meeting, organized by staff at Campbell River Senior Secondary, was the latest development in the renewed crisis at the school sparked by a school board decision Tuesday to ask Young for his resignation.

School district secretary-treasurer Phil Sampson delivered the request to Young's office Wednesday and left several minutes later with an official written reply from the principal saying he didn't have "the slightest intention of resigning."

Young had the floor for most of the orderly two-hour meeting at Campbell River community hall, fielding questions from the audience and answering charges levelled against him Tuesday by school trustee Ray Sharpe.

Sharpe had charged that Young refused to supply district superintendent Bill Ramsay and the school board with requested information, including exact attendance figures.

"I state here publicly," Young said, "that the allegation is categorically untrue, absolutely untrue. We have never denied information.

"What I have done is resist very, very strongly the harassment of Mr. Ramsay's demands for information which has nearly paralyzed me from doing my real job as principal of that school," he said.

"I've been principal for 15 years (seven years here) and never in my life have I been harassed like this for information."

He related the story Wednesday night to a rally of more than 900 at Lewisporte, some 80 miles north of here.

The 71-year-old Mr. Smallwood, who wears neither a belt nor suspenders, said he was surrounded by a large crowd when, without warning, the seam in the back of his trousers unravelled and they dropped to the ground.

Fortunately, he said, the crowd was snugged up so tightly against him that he was able to stoop over and retrieve the trousers before most people realized what had happened.

Socred Marshall Bolts to Tories

By PETER McNELLY
Times Staff

Don Marshall of South Peace River resigned from the Social Credit government Wednesday to join the Progressive Conservatives, protesting government inaction on the problems of agriculture and small businesses.

Marshall became the third person to quit Social Credit since it came to power in 1952. He joins Scott Wallace (PC—Oak Bay) as a Tory, giving that party two seats without having won either in an election.

Wallace Quit Last Summer

Wallace quit the Socreds Aug. 18, 1971 and joined the PCs early this year. When the house resumed sitting in the evening, Marshall rose in his place and said:

"I beg leave of this house to make a statement of public interest. I want to formally announce tonight my resignation from the Social Credit Party and to advise henceforth that I will be sitting in this house as a member of the Progressive Conservative party."

He said he did not want to "disparage" the government, but it had become obvious that its policies were not helping agriculture and small businesses.

"Because of these reasons and many others, I do now leave the house," Marshall said, then walked out of the chamber.

All opposition MLAs pounded their deks in approval, but so did Socreds Agnes Kripps (Vancouver South) and Dudley Little (Skeena).

Bennett later refused comment, but he said he was unaware that Marshall was going to quit the government.

Marshall was first elected in 1969, taking 70 per cent of the vote in his riding. His defection marks the first time the Socreds will not hold a seat in the Peace River since they took power in 1952.

Marshall's formal resignation came just after 8 p.m., but he first announced it outside the house after the legislature rose for dinner at 6 p.m.

He told reporters he made up his mind about 4 p.m. He said he had first been approached by B.C. Tory leader Derril Warren three weeks ago.

Marshall described Warren as a protege of Alberta Conservative Premier Peter Lougheed. He said he became impressed with Lougheed last year while campaigning in Alberta for the Socreds and admires his farm policies.

Marshall, 39, said the Tory sweep in Alberta was a healthy change which brought many young people to government. He said he was first asked to join B.C.'s Tories by Warren's predecessor John de Wolf but was not enthusiastic

Marshall 'Made No Deals'

Don Marshall made no deals with the provincial Tories when he decided to quit the Social Credit Party, B.C. Progressive Conservative Party leader Derril Warren said Wednesday.

Warren told a press conference he made no promises to the MLA from South Peace River during their discussions over the last month.

The Tory leeader had just flown to Victoria to greet his new party member after hearing of his resignation on the 6 p.m. news in Vancouver.

"He's got serious problems in his area," Warren said, "serious agricultural problems and serious industrial problems. He has tried very hard to get the government to recognize the problems and do something about them and the government has failed to do so."

DELIGHTED

Oak Bay MLA Scott Wallace, who quit the Socreds last August and later joined the Tories, said he was delighted with Marshall's defection.

The two men are close friends.

"He's an independent thinker and he has guts," Wallace said.

Warren said Marshall's res-

Blizzard Kills Quebec Strike

Times News Services

QUEBEC — A state of emergency has been declared in the wake of a blizzard as Quebec City police called in snowmobiles to rescue persons stranded in automobiles overnight.

The storm, which raged across most of the east and central parts of the province, dumping a foot and a half of snow, freezing rain and ice pellets, also forced postponement of a planned 24-hour strike by 210,000 provincial government employees.

Quebec Mayor Gilles Lamontagne called for calm in a radio address. Many people were without electricity or stranded in towntown hotels and office buildings.

POLES TOPPLE

Winds of up to 46 miles an hour toppled hundreds of utility poles throughout the area north of Montreal from Hull to the Gaspe.

Marcel Pepin, president of the Confederation of National Trade Unions, announced the postponement of the strike at a news conference. No new date was set.

He said the combination of the planned strike and the crippling blizzard could endanger the public.

The strike had been planned by a common front of three labor groups — the CNTU, the Quebec Federation of Labor and the Quebec Teachers Corp.

Until the announcement, various preparations had been under way to maintain minimal services when the strike started.

TRANSPORT HALTED

The blizzard paralysed transportation in Quebec City, and schools, commercial establishments and all non-essential government offices remained closed today. The two bridges leading to the city across the St. Lawrence River are closed.

Feb. Price Rise Record in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The biggest jump in grocery prices in 14 years last month led to the sharpest rise in over-all United States living costs since before President Nixon imposed economic controls Aug. 15, the government reported today.

The consumer price index, measuring typical family living costs, rose five-tenths of one per cent in February, largest increase in nine months, the labor department's bureau of labor statistics said.

Grocery prices, which include a number of items that are not subject to federal price controls, soared 1.9 per cent for the greatest one-month increase since March, 1958.

The report followed the resignation of three AFL-CIO members of Nixon's pay board, who charged the government was rigidly holding down wages while letting prices climb. (See Page 15.)

The bureau also reported that average weekly earnings of some 45 million workers rose 35 cents a week to $130.27, but that purchasing power declined 24 cents because of the rise in consumer prices.

The February increase pushed the price index to 123.8 per cent of its 1967 average. This means it cost $12.38 last month for every $10 worth of typical family purchases five years ago.

The February increase was the greatest since a six-tenths of one per cent rise last June, two months before Nixon imposed a 90-day wage-price freeze which was then followed by Phase Two controls.

EASTER BLEEDING SYNDROME is the explanation given by doctors for the mysterious bleeding in the hands, feet and side of Clorette Robinson, 10, of Oakland, Calif. The bleeding has been going on for a week but there are no wounds. Medical authorities believe it is caused by auto-suggestion or other emotional conditions with the girl associating herself with the crucifixion of Jesus Christ on Good Friday.

Ottawa Tied to Methadone

By JEFF CARRUTHERS
Special to the Times

OTTAWA — The government will not experiment with giving heroin to heroin addicts legally, as is happening in Britain and as was recently suggested to the LeDain commission.

Health Minister John Munro said outside the Commons Wednesday that he did not think the experiment with heroin should be tried.

One reason, he explained, is that the suggestion was "carefully hedged" in the drug treatment report published in January by the LeDain Commission on Drug Abuse.

Instead, health experts have decided to place emphasis in heroin treatment on controlled methadone therapy. Methadone is a substitute for heroin and while it is addictive, it does not produce as much of a "high" as heroin for the addict.

"We want to give our new methadone treatment policy a good trial and see what it does," Munro explained. Restrictions on methadone use were announced in February and go into effect June 1.

The minister said he would make an official statement on the heroin experiment question in "about two weeks."

In the Commons Wednesday, he told Frank Howard (NDP — Skeena) that he hoped, "to clean up" aspects of the LeDain commission's treatment report that he had not dealt with as yet with a statement to the house shortly.

The LeDain commission suggested in its drug treatment report, very cautiously, that heroin should be made available to some physicians for treating special cases of heroin addiction on an experimental basis, partially in the hopes of luring addicts to methadone treatment.

How to Buzz Bomb Calls

Phone Gadget Could Crack That Young Voice of Doom (Is It a Boy or a Girl?) Which Has Unnerved a School

Plagued by school bomb scares, Victoria school board officials have received a little electronic help from their friends.

B.C. Tel is installing a device on school phones enabling the tracing of incoming calls.

It works like this: an anonymous caller warns of a bomb and then hangs up. But the device prevents the connection from being broken as long as the phone is not hung up at the school. Then the school official simply calls the telephone operator who traces the call, according to school board officials.

And presto, the caller's anonymity is exploded, so to speak.

A voice that sounds like "either a boy or a girl" has created three major disruptions at Cedar Hill Junior Secondary since Friday by uttering bomb scares over the phone.

"Even the staff is getting upset — apart from the nuisance" of evacuating the school and disrupting classes, Principal Les Isaacson said today.

He said that he had to circulate a letter to all the parents of the school's 700 students to explain that the calls have been a hoax after rumors were running around that "something" had been found in the school.

Cedar Hill hasn't been the only school bothered by bomb

scares. In the last two weeks, Camosun College has received two, and on Wednesday morning an elementary school in Saanich was evacuated, according to Saanich Police Inspector J. M. Post.

At Cedar Hill, Friday's bomb threat at 2:35 p.m. had students out for 40 minutes while police, firemen and teachers searched the school. On Monday, a 8:35 a.m. call had the school out for 35 minutes, and on Wednesday at 12:30 p.m. threat forced closure for the rest of the day.

Isaacson said that the voice was believed to be a boy's in the first two calls, then it sounded like a girl's in the last call. "It's one of those voices that could be either a boy or girl."

He added it was young enough to be a student's.

Police, together with B.C. Tel, have made "arrangements" designed to catch the caller next time he or she calls, Isaacson said.

In his letter to parents, the principal explained that students had to be sent home twice in whatever clothes they happened to be wearing at the time of the scare.

Only with the full permission of parents would students be let back into the school during the searches to retrieve their belongings, he said.

"We ask you to bear with us at this time and accept the fact that ignoring such a call might place your children in potential danger even though it can be considered that the call is a hoax."

Isaacson said today that the threats have not resulted in abnormal absenteeism.

Victoria Fraud Squad Set Loose to Draw Up Dossier

On High-Pressure Activities of 'Dare to Be Great'

Peterson Plans Hard Look At Pyramid Selling Deals

By ROBERT OLVER and WALTER McKINNON, Times Staff

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson promised Wednesday to crack down on pyramid selling schemes in British Columbia if they are being carried on as a result of loopholes in the Criminal Code of Canada.

Peterson's pledge came following a statement from Victoria city Police Chief Jack Gegory that his department's fraud squad is preparing a brief for submission to the attorney-general on the activities of Dare To Be Great of Canada (1971) Ltd., a company allegedly carrying on a pyramid-selling operation in Victoria at present.

Peterson said if cases now being tried under the Criminal Code of Canada do not result in convictions he will consider tightening provisions of the provincial securities act.

CHARGED

Dare To Be Great and another firm owned by the same principals and operated on a similar basis, Koscot Interplanetary Ltd., have been charged under the federal criminal code (Section 189 (1) E) in Montreal, Edmonton, Calgary and North Vancouver.

Both firms are controlled by Glenn Turner, a South Carolina entrepeneur labeled by Life Magazine in May, 1971, as a "high-pressure" salesman.

"Pyramid sales schemes are not the type of promotion to be in any way encouraged," Peterson said.

He contended that pyramid selling schemes were a danger because "they often take worthwhile business propositions and corrupt them so that they enrich the promoters, running out of steam before they make any return to the average investor."

MULTI-LEVEL

Turner, who, according to Life Magazine, today sits at the top of a financial empire worth hundreds of millions of dollars, founded his fortune on the basis of multi-level or pyramid selling.

In 1967 he borrowed $5,000 to start a cosmetics company, Koscot Interplanetary. He was a rich man, however, long before any cosmetics were sold.

For example, a man who purchased a Koscot distributorship for $5,000 was allowed to sign up sub-distributors at $2,000 each and he received a commission of $700 for each of these.

MINOR PART

Cosmetics, according to Life Magazine, were a very minor part of the operation — distributors were making money just selling sub-distributorships.

Peterson said Wednesday the government has repeatedly warned would-be investors against pyramid schemes and added: "We would again advise anyone to seek competent advice before putting their money in any such plan."

Chief Gregory said "We have been watching this operation and . . . as a matter of policy we are preparing a brief on what we know of their operations for the attorney-general."

PREMIER CONCERNED

Last week Premier Bennett also told the Times that he was concerned about pyramid selling schemes and hinted that B.C. would take steps to tighten existing provincial legislation "if that appears to be necessary."

Victoria city Det.-Sgt. Tom Smith, who is in charge of preparing the brief on Dare To Be Great for Peterson's department, says he expects to have it ready in "about a week."

Inspector R. S. Wood of the Victoria Royal Canadian Mounted Police 'E' Division says the force is "aware of the existence of this organization in Canada" and if it sees a possibility of legal action against the firm "we would naturally refer it to the attorney-general."

Dare To Be Great (which markets a four-stage self-improvement package at prices up to $5,000) and its parent firm, Koscot, have been restricted or banned in a number of U.S. states. The most recent ban, in Oregon last week, restricted Dare To Be Great to marketing only the two lowest levels of its program — to a maximum of $2,000.

In Canada, until at least one of the trials now in progress is concluded, both firms are free to continue operations.

'CROWS THAT PREY ON HUMAN VICTIMS'

A 21-year-old man who told court he realized "prison is the only way I'm finally going to get off heroin" was sentenced today to six months definite and six months indeterminate for cashing forged cheques.

Alexander David Hogg, of 1315 Roy, pleaded guilty to uttering a $25 cheque he knew to be forged Monday, and trying to cash a cheque for $40 at The Bay Wednesday.

Hogg had received a two-year probation term only last week on eight counts of uttering. He also was charged today with breach of that probation.

Judge William Ostler told the accused the combination of offences usually warranted a longer jail term, but said he was "encouraged" by Hogg's realization that "heroin and crime are inseparable."

The judge ripped heroin dealers, "carrion crows that prey upon their human victims just as their black counterparts do in nature. They hang around waiting for their victims to go out and steal to get money."

Hogg was ordered to the Lower Mainland Regional Correctional Centre, with a recommendation from Ostler that the six-month definite term be served in a forestry camp.

UVic English Head Plans to Step Down

Dr. Roy Leslie, 49, head of the University of Victoria's largest department—English, will step down at the end of the next academic year.

Leslie said he notified the administration of his intentions last fall so that it would have a lot of time to find a successor if it decided to look outside the faculty of 54 members.

Leslie is the fifth top administrator to announce his resignation this year. The others have been president Bruce Partridge, vice-president Jack Kyle, fine arts dean Peter Garvie and arts and science dean John Climenhaga.

MAIN REASON

Leslie said that he will remain on the faculty as one of the three remaining senior professors in English, the other two of which are Robin Skelton and John Peter.

The "overriding reason" for his resignation is his desire to devote his full-time energies to teaching and research in his specialty — medieval literature.

Leslie came to UVic four years ago to head the department from the University of Wisconsin. A Scotsman, he had spend most of his career at the University of Manchester.

'PETERED OUT'

During his administration "we've overhauled every area of study," including introduction of graduate studies for both a MA and a PhD, and two new first-year courses.

He noted that during 1968-69 a structure was created that would allow students to be represented on department committees.

DOCTOR FEARED DROWNED

The canoe was found Wednesday by RCMP searchers, overturned and jammed under logs nine miles upriver from Port Renfrew.

Theatre Site Studied By Holiday Inn Chain

The Holiday Inn chain has reportedly abandoned plans to build a hotel on the Nordal property on Wharf Street in downtown Victoria in favor of a a new site at Yates and Blanshard.

If the new plan is carried out, sources say, the hotel would replace the Capitol movie theatre and Ming's Kitchen restaurant.

Inability to reach an agreement on terms of the Nordal deal is apparently the reason for the switch.

The Nordal property lies between Wharf and Government streets along Courtney but is bisected by Langley Street, which would require closing for a hotel development.

One of the adjacent property owners on Langley had been unwilling to give simple consent to the street closing, another possible factor in the switch by Holiday Inn.

The city earlier promised to close and sell Langley if other parties were agreeable.

How Not to Help the Canadian Writer

AT THE RISK OF SEEMing out of step with the new, self-conscious nationalism, I hope that nothing will come of a scheme aired on CBC's national news the other evening. I was dozing when its proponent began his pitch, and didn't catch his name. But his suggestion, which brought me wide awake and growling, was that our book-sellers should be required to allot a quota of their shelf-space to paperbacks turned out by Canadian writers.

Canada's publishers would presumably hasten to fill this space liberated from the American paperback swarm. The Canadian author would benefit from an expanded market, and we would all be that much closer to achieving the Great Whatsis, the National Talisman, the Canadian Identity.

Superficially, it's a neat scheme. If adopted, it would subject the bookseller to the same compulsion visited on our television and radio outlets by the Canadian content rulings. The book trade mightn't be too happy about it, but I doubt that Canadians at large would be moved to protest yet another arm-twisting in an era that sees personal freedoms on the decline.

But this paper tiger does have a few holes in it, and since a federal government given over to the enjoyment of a prolonged silly season might miss them, I would like to point a few of them out.

The book-seller doesn't stand at the end of the literary chain. Beyond him is the reader who, thank God, is still free to decide what he chooses to read. And if a book, whether paperback or hard cover, doesn't offer the entertainment or instruction he demands, his first scrutiny will be his last.

Another point. The Canadian writer with something to impart and the ability to put it on paper isn't condemned to a state of unpublished frustration. Our woods aren't full of mute, inglorious Miltons denied the literary renown they deserve.

That face-saving illusion is cuddled by many a would-be writer whose work has failed to find publication. It has, in fact, established itself as one of the legends-without-substance that cluster around the writers' craft.

The facts, however, don't support it.

At a generous estimate, about 90 per cent of the manuscripts that turn up in Canadian — or American — publisher's offices have nothing going for them except the earnest hopes of those who submitted them.

If the remaining 10 per cent yields publishable material, the editor will be properly grateful.

It's a red-letter day when he bags a winner — and from my own experience on both sides of an editorial desk, I can testify that it doesn't come very often.

Not often enough, I suggest, to make any enforced Canadian-content proposal worth the powder to blow it.

I'm not knocking the Canadian writer as such. For a country of 21 million, we're producing as many authentic authors as can be expected. I don't doubt, either, that their number if not their ratio of incidence, will increase with our population.

Government can't do anything to change that. Three men with a new song's measure may tumble a kingdom down, but a government can't make gifted writers of songs or anything else. All it's likely to produce in its attempts too lay on culture with a scoop-shovel is another boondoggle to be paid for out of the taxpayers' pockets.

Some of the Canadians and sojourners in Canada whose writings have earned space in the book stores made the break-through into print in Canada. Others took the long way around. Their work first won acceptance in the United States or in England.

It is significant to note, though, that they have one thing in common. Nobody attempted to force a readership for them. They hitched talent to perseverance and stamina, and did the thing on their own.

That's why I growl when someone who fails to realize that we're shaping our Canadian identities at our own pace and in our own way permits overheated nationalism to run away with him. He and Ottawa can best serve Canadian letters by leaving bookseller, pblisher and writer alone.

Park Fund Not for City

The capital regional district park fund was not established to provide municipal parks, a B.C. parks branch official said today.

He was commenting on a suggestion made by Mayor Peter Pollen Wednesday that the city might contribute Thetis Park to the region if the regional board looks after creation of more small parks in the metropolitan area.

The provincial government contributes to the regional park fund.

"The park fund was established to provide parklands in the region for future use," he said. "Already some of the purchased parklands are being widely used, such as Witty's Lagoon and East Sooke Park."

The mayor at a regional board budget debate said one other alternative was for the city to sell the park to a developer for a subdivision.

Kaiser Mine Shakeup

OAKLAND, Calif. (CP) — Kaiser Resources Ltd. announced Wednesday the election of Stephen A. Giard as president, chief executive officer, director and a member of the executive committee of the subsidiary of Kaiser Steel Corp.

He succeeds C. Lee Emerson, who submitted his resignation Wednesday after 30 years with the Kaiser organization.

In other Kaiser Resources management actions at a meeting here, the Kaiser board elected Edgar F. Kaiser Jr., eldest son of industrialist Edgar F. Kaiser, as a director and executive vice-president of operations; Roland A. Kjelland as a director and executive vice-president, administration and finance; and Edgar F. Kaiser Sr. as a member of the executive committee.

Kaiser chairman Jack L. Ashby said Giard has 33 years experience in heavy construction and international business management, including 10 years as president of Kaiser Jeep Corp. He and his two new executive vice-presidents have been reviewing the entire operations of Kaiser Resources and will establish new corporate headquarters in Vancouver.

Kaiser Resources owns coal deposits in eastern British Columbia, mined through open-pit operations for shipment to Japan.

Kaiser Resources also announced Wednesday the resignations of three directors, C. Fred Borden, Robert G. Heers and C. A. Macilvaine.

Ashby said Heers and Macilvaine now will devote full-time to their responsibilities with Kaiser Steel Corp. Emerson and Borden will continue as directors of Kaiser Steel.

Simpsons-Sears

A rights offering to shareholders of Simpsons-Sears Ltd. will raise about $25 million to reduce debt and permit continued expansion of retail store outlets.

Terms will be set after the company's April 6 annual meeting.

The major shareholders — Simpsons Ltd. and Sears Roebuck and Co. of Chicago — indicate they will subscribe for additional shares under terms of the offering.

Between them they own all the B and C class stock, or voting shares. The non-voting A shares, of which 2.56 million are outstanding, are publicly-held.

N. Electric

Efforts to increase efficiency in 1971 led to net earnings more than three times the level of 1970, report Northern Electric Co. Ltd.

The Montreal firm had consolidated sales of $576.29 million, an increase of $12.88 million, while profit rose from $4 million ($2.24 a share) to $12.6 million ($6.96).

There was major reorganization of the company last year, including establishment of a U.S. subsidiary, Northern Telecom Inc., for access to the American market.

Dunhill

Consolidation of two operating subsidiaries into one corporate entity under a new name has been approved by shareholders of United Provincial Investments Ltd.

Dunhill Development Corp. Ltd. is the new title, embodying the Greater Vancouver activities, assets and management of W. K. P. Construction Ltd. and United Provincial Investments. Full integration of their raw land development, property management, real estate marketing and construction phases results.

Subsidiary companies remaining will also have the new name Dunhill in their titles — Dunhill Realty Ltd. and Dunhill Homes Ltd. — except for Fisher Developments Ltd.

Campeau

Campeau Corp. Ltd. reports Power Corp. has agreed to sell 6.28 million common shares back to Campeau.

Campeau said it would pay $4.50 a share for its stock, totalling $28.29 million.

The company said the proposal, to be submitted to Campeau shareholders, is conditional upon Campeau completing negotiations for a $27 million term loan, expected by April 4.

Pending approval, Campeau Corp. will also buy Power Corp.'s holding of 1 million 20-cent par value Class B preference shares.

The plan also requires approval of an Ontario Supreme Court judge.

Afton

Assays from diamond and percussion drilling on its Kamloops copper property indicate extension of the ore body west of the lake, reports Afton Mines Ltd.

For distances of up to 360 feet, assays show ore of apparent commercial value in three sections of drill core from hole 72-3 and in seven percussion holes, mainly in the same zone.

A rotary drill, from which assays were reported previously, also is working on the property.

S-S Acceptance

Notice of a public offering of secured debentures has been filed with securities commissions by Simpsons-Sears Acceptance Co. Ltd. Details will be set later.

The company, which operates the stores, warehouses and catalogue sales offices of Simpsons-Sears Ltd. in Canada, is wholly owned by Simpsons Ltd., of Toronto, and Sears Roebuck and Co., of Chicago.

Firemen check rubble left by Ireland's latest bomb blast

Peace Rejection Rumor Deepens Ulster Crisis

Times News Services

LONDON — Northern Ireland Premier Brian Faulkner flew back to London today for further crisis talks with Prime Minister Edward Heath. Reports circulated in Belfast that Northern Ireland had rejected Heath's peace plan aimed at ending violence in Ulster.

And in Carrickfergus, Northern Ireland, a huge terrorist bomb blast injured 12 persons after a false tip forced police to evacuate the wrong area of the market town.

The explosion — caused by up to 200 pounds of gelignite in a parked car — shattered buildings in North Street after police were told the bomb was in West Street.

Security forces said it was "deliberate misinformation" on the same pattern as Belfast's Donegall Streeet blast earlier this week in which six persons were killed and 150 were injured.

The casualties in Carrickfergus — none was seriously hurt — included three policemen.

In the House of Commons in London, Gerard Fitt, Northern Ireland Republican MP, reported the rumors that Heath's peace plan had been rejected and said if this were true there could be "communal violence and disturbances" in Ulster this weekend.

Heath and Faulkner met for nearly 10 hours Wednesday to discuss the plan, believed to offer more civil rights to the minority Roman Catholics; then each held urgent meetings with their cabinets in London and Belfast.

After the Belfast meeting the cabinet issued a statement saying it was united behind Faulkner but without saying whether it was for or against the peace proposals. Rejection of the peace package could lead to Britain's seizing control of the Ulster government.

Heath received a telephone call from Faulkner and then called in his top ministers, including Foreign Secretary Sir Alec Douglas-Home who had cut short an official visit to Israel to help out with the crisis.

London's silence and the Belfast statement about cabinet unity were interpreted by politicians here as an indication the two governments are deeply at loggerheads about concessions the British want Faulkner to make to the RCs.

The two prime ministers conferred by telephone after their respective cabinet meetings. Political sources said Britain was holding over Faulkner's head the threat of suspension of the province's local government and imposition of direct rule from London if the British proposals are rejected.

Women in Belfast's Protestant Sandy Row district took steps today to thwart the booby-trapping of vehicles. They threw up barricades of furniture and garbage to prevent cars from parking. Two bombs have exploded in parked cars in the district in the past two weeks.

"If anyone leaves his car in Sandy Row he'll find it wrecked when he comes back," Mrs. Patricia Neal said. "They can jail us if they like, but we're going to protect our homes."

Embattled Principal Supported

Special to the Times

CAMPBELL RIVER — A campaign to support embattled high school principal John Young got a boost Wednesday night when a public meeting gave him an overwhelming vote of confidence.

There were about six dissenters when chairman Jack Torrance called for a confidence vote and 650 persons including about 450 adults shouted their approval.

The meeting, organized by staff at Campbell River Senior Secondary, was the latest development in the renewed crisis at the school sparked by a school board decision Tuesday to ask Young for his resignation.

School district secretary-treasurer Phil Sampson delivered the request to Young's office Wednesday and left several minutes later with an official written reply from the principal saying he didn't have "the slightest intention of resigning."

Young had the floor for most of the orderly two-hour meeting at Campbell River community hall, fielding questions from the audience and answering charges levelled against him Tuesday by school trustee Ray Sharpe.

Sharpe had charged that Young refused to supply district superintendent Bill Ramsay and the school board with requested information, including exact attendance figures.

"I state here publicly," Young said, "that the allegation is categorically untrue, absolutely untrue. We have never denied information.

"What I have done is resist very, very strongly the harassment of Mr. Ramsay's demands for information which has nearly paralyzed my work and has prevented me from doing my real job as principal of that school," he said.

"I've been principal for 15 years (seven years here) and never in my life have I been harassed like this for information."

The 71-year-old Mr. Smallwood, who wears neither a belt nor suspenders, said he was surrounded by a large crowd when, without warning, the seam in the back of his trousers unravelled and they dropped to the ground.

Fortunately, he said, the crowd was snugged up so tightly against him that he was able to stoop over and retrieve the trousers before most people realized what had happened.

Socred Marshall Bolts to Tories

By PETER McNELLY
Times Staff

Don Marshall of South Peace River resigned from the Social Credit government Wednesday to join the Progressive Conservatives, protesting government inaction on the problems of agriculture and small businesses.

Marshall became the third person to quit Social Credit since it came to power in 1952. He joins Scott Wallace (PC—Oak Bay) as a Tory, giving that party two seats without having won either in an election.

MARSHALL

Wallace Quit Last Summer

Wallace quit the Socreds Aug. 18, 1971 and joined the PCs early this year. When the house resumed sitting in the evening, Marshall rose in his place and said:

"I beg leave of this house to make a statement of public interest. I want to formally announce tonight my resignation from the Social Credit Party and to advise henceforth that I will be sitting in this house as a member of the Progressive Conservative party."

He said he did not want to "disparage" the government, but it had become obvious that its policies were not helping agriculture and small businesses.

"Because of these reasons and many others, I do now leave the house," Marshall said, then walked out of the chamber.

All opposition MLAs pounded their deks in approval, but so did Socreds Agnes Kripps (Vancouver South) and Dudley Little (Skeena).

Bennett later refused comment, but he said he was unaware that Marshall was going to quit the government.

Marshall was first elected in 1969, taking 70 per cent of the vote in his riding. His defection marks the first time the Socreds will not hold a seat in the Peace River since they took power in 1952.

Marshall's formal resignation came just after 8 p.m., but he first announced it outside the house after the legislature rose for dinner at 6 p.m.

He told reporters he made up his mind about 4 p.m. He said he had first been approached by B.C. Tory leader Derril Warren three weeks ago.

Marshall described Warren as a protege of Alberta Conservative Premier Peter Lougheed. He said he became impressed with Lougheed last year while campaigning in Alberta for the Socreds and admires his farm policies.

Marshall, 39, said the Tory sweep in Alberta was a healthy change which brought many young people to government. He said he was first asked to join B.C.'s Tories by Warren's predecessor John de Wolf but was not enthusiastic

Marshall 'Made No Deals'

Don Marshall made no deals with the provincial Tories when he decided to quit the Social Credit Party, B.C. Progressive Conservative Party leader Derril Warren said Wednesday.

Warren told a press conference he made no promises to the MLA from South Peace River during their discussions over the last month.

The Tory leader had just flown to Victoria to greet his new party member after hearing of his resignation on the 6 p.m. news in Vancouver.

"He's got serious problems in his area," Warren said, "serious agricultural problems and serious industrial problems. He has tried very hard to get the government to recognize the problems and do something about them and the government has failed to do so."

DELIGHTED

Oak Bay MLA Scott Wallace, who quit the Socreds last August and later joined the Tories, said he was delighted with Marshall's defection.

The two men are close friends.

"He's an independent thinker and he has guts," Wallace said.

Warren said Marshall's res-

Blizzard Kills Quebec Strike

Times News Services

QUEBEC — A state of emergency has been declared in the wake of a blizzard as Quebec City police called in snowmobiles to rescue persons stranded in automobiles overnight.

The storm, which raged across most of the east and central parts of the province, dumping a foot and a half of snow, freezing rain and ice pellets, also forced postponement of a planned 24-hour strike by 210,000 provincial government employees.

Quebec Mayor Gilles Lamontagne called for calm in a radio address. Many people were without electricity or stranded in townhtown hotels and office buildings.

POLES TOPPLE

Winds of up to 46 miles an hour toppled hundreds of utility poles throughout the area north of Montreal from Hull to the Gaspe.

Marcel Pepin, president of the Confederation of National Trade Unions, announced the postponement of the strike at a news conference. No new date was set.

He said the combination of the planned strike and the crippling blizzard could endanger the public.

The strike had been planned by a common front of three labor groups — the CNTU, the Quebec Federation of Labor and the Quebec Teachers Corp.

Until the announcement, various preparations had been under way to maintain minimal services when the strike started.

TRANSPORT HALTED

The blizzard paralysed transportation in Quebec City, and schools, commercial establishments and all non-essential government offices remained closed today. The two bridges leading to the city across the St. Lawrence River are closed.

Feb. Price Rise Record in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The biggest jump in grocery prices in 14 years last month led to the sharpest rise in over-all United States living costs since before President Nixon imposed economic controls Aug. 15, the government reported today.

The consumer price index, measuring typical family living costs, rose five-tenths of one per cent in February, largest increase in nine months, the labor department's bureau of labor statistics said.

Grocery prices, which include a number of items that are not subject to federal price controls, soared 1.9 per cent for the greatest one-month increase since March, 1958.

The report followed the resignation of three AFL-CIO members of Nixon's pay board, who charged the government was rigidly holding down wages while letting prices climb. (See Page 15.)

The bureau also reported that average weekly earnings of some 45 million workers rose 35 cents a week to $130.27, but that purchasing power declined 24 cents because of the rise in consumer prices.

The February increase pushed the price index to 123.8 per cent of its 1967 average. This means it cost $12.38 last month for every $10 worth of typical family purchases five years ago.

The February increase was the greatest since a six-tenths of one per cent rise last June, two months before Nixon imposed a 90-day wage-price freeze which was then followed by Phase Two controls.

EASTER BLEEDING SYNDROME is the explanation given by doctors for the mysterious bleeding in the hands, feet and side of Clorette Robinson, 10, of Oakland, Calif. The bleeding has been going on for a week but there are no wounds. Medical authorities believe it is caused by auto-suggestion or other emotional conditions with the girl associating herself with the crucifixion of Jesus Christ on Good Friday.

Ottawa Tied to Methadone

By JEFF CARRUTHERS
Special to the Times

OTTAWA — The government will not experiment with giving heroin to heroin addicts legally, as is happening in Britain and as was recently suggested to the LeDain commission.

Health Minister John Munro said outside the Commons Wednesday that he did not think the experiment with heroin should be tried.

One reason, he explained, is that the suggestion was "carefully hedged" in the drug treatment report published in January by the LeDain Commission on Drug Abuse.

Instead, health experts have decided to place emphasis in heroin treatment on controlled methadone therapy. Methadone is a substitute for heroin and while it is addictive, it does not produce as much of a "high" as heroin for the addict.

"We want to give our new methadone treatment policy a good trial and see what it does," Munro explained. Restrictions on methadone use were announced in February and go into effect June 1.

The minister said he would make an official statement on the heroin experiment question in "about two weeks."

In the Commons Wednesday, he told Frank Howard (NDP — Skeena) that he hoped, "to clean up" aspects of the LeDain commission's treatment report that he had not dealt with as yet with a statement to the house shortly.

The LeDain commission suggested in its drug treatment report, very cautiously, that heroin should be made available to some physicians for treating special cases of heroin addiction on an experimental basis, partially in the hopes of luring addicts to methadone treatment.
